SCRYE  PRESENTS

The Ultimate Unofficial Pokémon Price and Players Guide

It's finally here!

Not just Team Rocket, the first expansion for the Pokémon Trading Card Game in months. That's super, but we're talking about what fans of the game have been demanding for a long time — a guide to the game by the experts at the leading magazine in the field: Scrye, The Guide to Collectible Card Games. Most gamers found out about the Pokémon game from Scrye long before it had become the sensation it is today. Over the last couple of years, Scrye has been the authority not just on strategy and prices for the game, but also for translations of the Japanese cards — the powerful ones most players want to use that aren't available in English yet.

This book has three sections: A guide to strategy, a guide to prices for cards, and a guide to the cards themselves. It can help you become a better Pokémon player and collector — just as keeping up with Scrye magazine keeps you up on the latest changes in the game!

Thanks to everyone involved — especially Jack Everitt, our accomplished Poké-Expert, and Joyce Greenholdt and Denise Janec, who found all the cards!

Enough talk. Deal the cards!

Decks For Beginners

A FEW IMPORTANT DECK-BUILDING PRINCIPLES

by Jason Winter

So, you've just started playing the Pokémon CCG and you don't know what to put in your deck. Or, maybe you've been playing for awhile, and you always seem to get beaten. Constructing an effective Pokémon deck really isn't that difficult and once you can understand a few of the basic strategies, you'll be on your way to solid deckbuilding in no time!

Here are a few of the most basic deck-building principles:

A deck should consist of one or (at the most) two different energy types. If you try to build a three- or four-energy deck, you'll never draw the cards that you require when you need them.

Stick with the 3/4-2-1 strategy. This means that if you're planning to include all three stages of a Pokémon's evolution (like Charmander, Charmeleon and Charizard), try to include three or four of the Basic Pokémon (Charmander), two of the Stage 1 card (Charmeleon), and one of the Stage 2 (Charizard). In the case of a Pokémon that only has Basic and Stage 1 forms (like Jigglypuff/Wigglytuff), go with three or four of the Basic and two of the Stage 1

(two or three Basic and one Stage 1 is also legitimate). At the very least, you should always have fewer copies of a Stage 1 Pokémon than you do of a Basic Pokémon and fewer of a Stage 2 than you have of a Stage 1.

Similarly, Basic Pokémon usually aren't worthwhile unless you also include their evolutions. Pikachu's cute, but if you're relying on him to win the game for you, you're probably in trouble. On the other hand, Basic Pokémon that don't have evolutions are often more powerful than their counterparts. Hitmonchan, Jynx, Chansey and Electabuzz are all good examples.

A typical deck should have about 14-16 Basic Pokémon, 8-10 Evolved Pokémon, 25-28 Energy, and about 10 Trainers. You can deviate from these numbers once you have some experience, but it's best to go with these when you're putting your first decks together.

Four of a card is better than one. It's tempting to throw in one of everything just for fun, but if you want to win, you need to concentrate your deck around a theme and trim the fat—removing cards and themes that aren't important to your deck.

Don't neglect your Trainers — they need to be as concentrated as your Pokémon. It's often a good idea to come up with Trainer themes just as you might come up with themes for your Pokémon. A healing theme might consist of four Potions, four Defenders, and two Super Potions. An energy-removal theme might feature four Energy Removals and two (or more) Super Removals. A retrieval theme might have PokéBalls, Computer Search and Pokémon Trader. While mixing themes is okay, and throwing in one copy of a few cards can give you required flexibility, don't base your strategy on any Trainer card when you only have a single copy of it in your deck. Having one PokéBall to fill an extra slot is fine, but don't rely on it to speed up your deck unless you include three or four.

Examine decks that people have already constructed and use them as templates. The decks in this book and Scrye magazine are great examples.

I receive a lot of e-mails that say: "I've never played this deck, but I need help in making it work." The best way to improve your deck is to play it and learn from your mistakes. There's only so much you can do by just looking at a card list. These pointers give you the foundation for a good deck, but you still have a lot of building to do.

Pokémon
Start with 14-16 basic and 8-10 evolved ones.

Trainers
Start with about 10 Trainer cards.

Energy
Start with about 25-28 energy cards.

Deck Lingo 101

What are those players talking about?

by Ka-Lok Fung

You've had it!

You've tried and tried but you can't seem to understand. For days and weeks, you've wanted to ask, "What is a BBP? Engine? Broken Card?" but you've been too shy to ask.

Don't worry. Pokémon Deck Lingo 101 is going to teach you all these terms and more. Astonish the pros with your knowledge. Before long, they'll be asking you to explain your "BBP Haymaker cycling engine that rivals the Rain Dance archetype."

Card Terminology

Big Basic Pokémon (BBP). Pokémon with high HP at the Basic Stage are Big Basic Pokémon (BBP). Often having powerful attacks and/or important abilities, BBP contribute many strategies to decks. Some examples of BBP include Electabuzz, Scyther, and Magmar (Fossil).

Family. A family of Pokémon refers to a Basic Pokémon and its evolutions. A well-known family line is Bulbasaur, Ivysaur, and Venusaur.

Hoser. A hoser is a card that effectively deals with an opponent's deck and/or card strategy. Lass is a hoser for trainer-intensive decks because it puts all the trainers in your hand back into the Draw Deck.

Broken Cards. Broken cards are powerful cards that some people believe shouldn't be in tournament decks. The cards are often perceived to be unbalanced or unfair. People frequently call cards such as Computer Search and Super Energy Removal broken because they greatly affect the card game. Broken cards are common targets for restrictions.

Proxy Cards (Proxies). A card in a deck that represents another card is a proxy card. You treat the proxy card the same way you would treat the actual card. Before buying a Charizard, for example, you may want to see how well it works. By testing your deck with a proxy instead of a Charizard, you'll see how well it fits. If it doesn't work well, you won't be wasting money by purchasing a Charizard. Remember, unless your deck is undergoing tests or a tournament judge has allowed you to use a proxy, proxy cards are illegal. In casual play, it's good etiquette to ask your opponent if it's OK to use proxy cards.

Mechanic(s). The abilities and functions of a Pokémon card are its mechanics. For example, Energy Removal's mechanic is its ability to remove an energy card from an opponent's Pokémon.

Splashed Cards. Splashed cards are cards placed into decks with very little or no support. They often are very powerful. A commonly splashed card is Scyther. Its resistance to Fighting Pokémon, its free retreat cost, and its colorless attack cost allow it to be very versatile.

Deck Terminology

Engine. In Pokémon, "engine" describes how Pokémon get into play and how you support them. Some engines prefer to use search cards to evolve Pokémon as quickly as possible while others focus on keeping cards in the Draw Deck to prevent decking. Whether the engine is slow and deliberate or quick and decisive, most deck engines come from many hours of practice and research.

Decking. Decking is to lose by running out of draw cards at the beginning of your turn. This often occurs when you use Bill and Professor Oak inappropriately or if your opponent is playing a Stall deck.

Card Advantage (Cycling). In the simplest terms, card advantage or cycling is the ability to draw more cards than your opponent is. In most games, this is a benefit because the odds of getting the cards you need to win increase as you draw more cards. Against a Stall deck, however, card advantage isn't to your favor. Bill, Professor Oak, and Gambler are all good ways of getting card advantage.

Deck Advantage. Deck advantage is having more cards in your draw deck than your opponent. It determines who loses (by running out of draw cards) and/or what cards you can draw. Mr. Fuji, Recycle, and Maintenance are important deck advantage cards because they allow you to put cards back into the draw deck.

Archetype. Archetype is a synonym for a deck's theme. As a deck becomes popular, people like to use archetype instead of theme because it sounds more professional.

Haymaker. Haymaker is a deck archetype that uses BBP, energy removal (Energy Removal and Super Energy Removal), and speed (Bill and Professor Oak) to knock out defending Pokémon. It is very easy to play and requires little strategy to play effectively.

Rain Dance. This archetype is very aggressive. Its goal is to bring Blastoise into play as quickly as possible. Using its Pokémon Power to charge Hydro Pump, Blastoise will do 60 HP damage every turn. Offensively oriented, Rain Dance decks often lack a solid defense.

Bench Destruction. Knocking out benched Pokémon using attacks that damage benched Pokémon is Bench Destruction's archetype. Frequently using Lightning and Fighting Pokémon, many Bench Destruction decks utilize a defensive battle strategy. Sometimes, the best offense is a good defense.

Stall. Stall archetypes use decking as their primary way to win. They often employ delay tactics so that games will last longer. For example, many Stall decks use high HP Pokémon because they take longer to Knock Out. It's very frustrating to play against a Stall deck!

Game terminology

Mulligan. When you don't have a basic Pokémon in your opening hand, you have a Mulligan. This regularly occurs when your deck has fewer than 14 basic Pokémon.

Metagame (Field). One of the most important terms in CCGs is metagaming — looking at what themes are common in your area and building/revising your deck so that it can deal with these themes. For example, a local area may be heavily into the speed theme. As a result, you may want to include Lass in your deck to counteract the Bill, Professor Oak, and Gambler cards that are common to that metagame. Richard Garfield once said, "There is always a bigger picture to the games than the hand currently being played."

DCI. An abbreviation for Duelist Convocation International. DCI is a part of Wizards of the Coast, Inc. It sanctions tournaments around the world and sets guidelines for CCG tournaments. It also ranks players around the world. Pokémon League members are automatically DCI members.

Banned Cards. Cards not allowed to be in tournament decks are banned cards. Currently, there are no banned cards in Pokémon.

Errata. Errors on cards are errata. Although there have been many picture and statistical errata, Pokémon rules errata currently don't exist. However, rule clarifications for cards do exist.

Your lesson on Pokémon jargon has just begun. There are still many more words to discover in the world of Pokémon! You're on your way to becoming a professional Pokémon linguist! Remember, Rain Dance decks with quick cycling engines will make an impact in DCI Sanctioned Tournaments, because they use overpowered (some would say broken) cards — and pay attention to the local metagame!

Building decks that win! INCLUDING WAYS TO USE TEAM ROCKET CARDS!

by Jason
Winter

Have you ever said

the following...?

“My deck always loses.”

“I need help with my deck.”

“What can I do to make this deck better?”

I receive about 50 e-mails a week with opening lines like these. Some of them just require a simple touch-up and some require a complete overhaul. When I do suggest changes, I stick with a few simple rules that help me determine how many and what kinds of each card should go in the deck.

If you've never built a deck before, turn to page 6 to read up on the basics. Then come back here to get into more advanced strategies!

On the following pages I will explain my deck-building secrets and the information I use when helping other people improve their decks. Just promise not to use these to take my job, OK?

One thing to remember while reading the following tips is that there are no hard and absolute rules. The ideas I explain below are the most basic and reliable deck-building concepts. While decks can vary from these guidelines and be successful, you should master the basics of deck building first before you try a wildly different deck idea.

Getting Started

Before you can pick out cards for your deck, you'll need to know how many of each card to use in your deck. Thus, I present to you Rule #1 of Pokémon deck construction:

A typical deck should have 18 to 22 Pokémon, of which 12 to 16 are Basic Pokémon; 24 to 28 energy; and 10 to 18 trainers.

1 This is a basic mix that works well for most decks. The number of Basic Pokémon is set so that you won't draw a Mulligan (a hand with no Pokémon you can play) on the first turn very often. As for the total, many people can overload on Pokémon (who can blame them — they're so cute!).

However, this takes away vital deck spots from the trainers and energy. Consider this: late in the game, when you've got a full Bench and both you and your opponent are down to your last Prize, drawing another Pokémon is a wasted card draw. If you had more trainers or energy, you'd get something you can use to win the game. You need at least 24 energy so you can be assured of having enough energy to power your attacks. And the trainers “fill in” whatever space you have left.

Picking Pokémon

The first thing most people select for their deck is the Pokémon. The most common problem I see in decks that are submitted to me is that people try to include too many Pokémon and too many different kinds of Pokémon. Some people submit decks with no more than one or two copies of any particular Pokémon. I'll explain why this is bad in a minute, but first, here are the major rules of Pokémon selection:

Never include more than two different types (Fighting, Grass, Psychic, etc.) of Pokémon.

This rule gives you flexibility in Pokémon selection while not making it too difficult to get the right energy. As an example of why you should never play with more than two types of Pokémon, put together a mix of five each of the five different types of Pokémon. Then put in five of each type of energy. Shuffle and draw seven cards. Do you have the right energy to power your Pokémon's attacks? You've probably got Fighting Energy and Fire Pokémon or Grass Energy and Psychic Pokémon. Even if you did get lucky and managed to get the right energy, you can't count on luck like that in the long run.

Because Colorless Pokémon can use any type of energy, feel free to include them in your decks; they do not count against the "only two types" rule.

When choosing evolution chains (like Bulbasaur/Ivysaur/Venusaur), always have more of the Basic Pokémon than the Stage 1 and more of the Stage 1 than the Stage 2.

Rule #3 is similarly tied to the laws of probability. You've probably heard of the 4/2/1 or the 4/3/2 rules of Pokémon evolution (if you have four of a Basic Pokémon, include two or three of the Stage 1 Pokémon and one or two of the Stage 2 Pokémon). If you have the same number (or more) of a Stage 1 Pokémon as you have of the corresponding Basic Pokémon, your chances of drawing the Stage 1 before you draw the Basic Pokémon are much greater. While you wait for the Basic Pokémon to show up, you've got a completely useless card in your hand, and that's not good.

Rule #3 is a rough guideline — some decks, especially those that rely on certain evolved Pokémon, like the Blastoise-heavy Rain Dance or the Wigglytuff deck, will play with more than the suggested amount of an evolved Pokémon. This is OK, but only if that Pokémon is vital to your success and you have the trainer cards (see below) to get that evolved Pokémon into play quickly.

Another offshoot of rule #3 is this: If you use evolution, don't play with a lot of different Pokémon. For example, a deck might have two Koffings, two Ekans, one Weezing, and one Arbok. A much better choice would be to have four Koffings and two Weezings or four Ekans and two Arboks. The simple reason for this is that you stand a better chance of drawing the right evolutions if you have more of the correct Basic Pokémon to evolve them from. With the first example, you might draw a Koffing and an Arbok. If you replaced Koffing with Ekans in your deck (or Arbok with Weezing), you'd have the right pair of Pokémon.

A final note on Basic Pokémon: the ones that evolve into Stage 1 and Stage 2 Pokémon are generally not worth including unless you plan to use their evolutions. They tend to be weak compared to the Basic Pokémon that don't evolve, like Hitmonchan, Chansey, or Mr. Mime. As with all rules, there are exceptions, but don't break this rule unless you have a clear reason for using Basic Pokémon without their evolved cousins.

Watch out for your weaknesses.

If you've ever played an all-Fire Pokémon deck, then you've probably come up against an all-Water deck at least once — and lost. Having more than one Weakness on your Pokémon can help you avoid an early loss. I never make a deck that doesn't have at least two Weaknesses in it, and sometimes I have three or more. Most Pokémon types have at least two Weaknesses, and a few colorless Pokémon sprinkled in can make your opponent's job that much more difficult.

Trainers

Trainers can be the trickiest part of a deck to select. Their uses aren't always as obvious as Pokémon, and there aren't any simple patterns like Basic-Stage 1-Stage 2 to follow. But with a little experience (and my help), you'll be able to sort through the trainer mix in no time.

Trainers can generally be grouped into one or two categories: the kind you only need one or two of, and the kind you should have three or four of, if any.

5 Sound confusing? Put simply, the same laws of probability apply to trainers that apply to Basic Pokémon. If you only put one or two of a certain type in your deck, your chances of drawing it when you really need it are slim. If you put in three or four, your chances go up considerably. Some trainers, like Bill and Gust of Wind, are useful just about all the time, while others, such as Pokémon Breeder and Full Heal, have restricted uses and are only useful in certain situations. Balancing usage with quantity is the key to effective trainer selection.

You should generally only have one or two of the “situational” trainers, while you should play with as many of the “anytime” trainers as you can. Four of a “situational” trainer will often lead to you holding useless copies of the card in your hand (or will lead to other problems — see below), while having one or two of the “anytime” trainers will mean that they don't come up as often as they should.

The chart at lower left categorizes frequently used trainers as “anytime” trainers (the kind you should have three or four of in your deck) or “situational” trainers (the kind you should have one or two of in your deck). Trainers from Team Rocket are shown with an asterisk!

Some of the “situational” trainers, like Computer Search or Professor Oak, can theoretically be used at any time. However, they each have a price attached: discarding cards for Computer Search or discarding your entire hand (and running out your deck too quickly) for Professor Oak. There are ways around these limitations, but such cards can lead you to disaster, if overused. There are some decks that use three or four of such cards, as is the case for most of the “situational” cards, but until you get a solid feel for deck building, you should stick to the guidelines above.

Have a theme for your trainers. Focus on that theme and see that it complements your Pokémon.

6 Far too many of the decks I receive have two of this trainer, one of that one, one of this, two of that. It seems as if the trainers are picked at random. You wouldn't do that with your Pokémon, so why do it with your trainers? There are some trainers that work in almost any deck, like Bill, Professor Oak, Gust of Wind, Computer Search, and Item Finder. After those, you should have an idea what you want to do with the rest of your trainers, and it may reflect on your Pokémon's abilities. Do you have a lot of evolution in your deck? Pokémon Breeder, Pokémon Trader, and Pokéball are all good cards for getting your evolved forms into play. Do your Pokémon have large retreat costs? Play with Switch. Do your Pokémon have low HP? Defender, Potion, and Super Potion should go in.

Some strategies don't need any particular Pokémon to make them work. Four Energy Removals and as many Super Energy Removals as you can get make an effective strategy no matter what. Scoop Up is an undervalued card that can deny your opponent a prize. The right trainers can mean the difference between a championship deck and an also-ran. You should devote as much time to trainer selection as you do to any part of your deck.

This used to be an easy part of the deck. Put in energy based on the type of Pokémon you have, split roughly the same as the Pokémon mix in your deck. If 2/3 of your Pokémon are Fire and 1/3 are Fighting, 16 Fire and 8 Fighting Energy would be about right, with some Double Colorless Energy mixed in, if needed. But with Team Rocket's new energy types in the environment, this decision is much more challenging than before. The question is, should you use these special energy cards?

The two new Colorless energies should obviously be used only if you have a significant number of Colorless Pokémon or Pokémon that use Colorless energy in their attacks. The Potion Energy is the more useful of the two, since you can be more assured of having damage on your Pokémon than you can of having a negative status that can be cured by the Full Heal Energy. If you do play with Full Heal Energy, it can replace any Full Heal cards you might have included in your trainer mix.

No deck should have fewer than 24 energy. Without at least that much, your deck won't be able to attack and retreat effectively.

The old Colorless standby, Double Colorless Energy, is obviously most useful if you have a large number of Pokémon that need two or more Colorless energy to attack. In addition to Colorless Pokémon, Pokémon like Scyther, Ryhorn, Nidorino, and Nidoking can benefit from this card.

In general, you should only put in four of any of these special energies if at least six or eight of your Pokémon cards can use them to their fullest extent. A deck that has just two Chanseys in it probably doesn't need a lot of Colorless energy support, but one or two such cards might come in handy.

The last new energy card in Team Rocket is Rainbow Energy. While it's obviously useless in a single-energy-type deck, it can really be a lifesaver in a deck that features two or (gasp!) three types of Pokémon. Anyone who's played a multi-energy deck has been faced with the dilemma of having Pokémon of one type and energy of another type. Rainbow Energy's versatility allows you to play it on any Pokémon and use it as any type of energy. The 10 points of damage are unfortunate but usually worth the price. Having a Pokémon that's unable to attack is like wasting a turn, and 10 damage is usually a small price to pay for the ability to launch an attack. Plus, the card can be used for different energy types on the same Pokémon, making it ideal for Psyduck or Golduck.

Beyond Deck Building

The best way to determine your deck's effectiveness is to play it as much as possible.

There's one type of e-mail I always cringe at: the one that says, "I've never played this deck, but ..." Usually I can't do much to help these decks out. After all, if you haven't played your deck, how can you know what you need to do to improve it? If you follow the tips in this article, you should put together a fairly solid deck, but you'll need to tweak it to your individual style and the local play environment. And to do that, you have to play your deck as much as possible, against as many different decks as possible.

After each game, try to analyze how you won or how you lost. If you won, what cards and strategies worked for you? Make those strategies a bigger part of your deck. Did you just get lucky? If so, then you might not have learned much about the true ability of your deck. If you lost, see what your opponent used to defeat you and try to think of ways to counter that strategy. You might even find yourself adopting his strategy, if it fits into your deck!

As an example, in a recent tournament I played in, I was defeated several times by decks with a lot of Energy Removal and Super Energy Removal cards. I couldn't keep energy on my Pokémon long enough to power my good attacks. So for my next deck, I've decided to go almost exclusively with Pokémon that don't require more than two energy to attack and I'm throwing in some Energy Removals of my own. Now, if I could just get the coin flips to go my way ...

The goal of your deck — and of playing the game — is to have fun.

This is a rule that's easy to forget. While winning is fun, and will often be your goal, there's no reason to play a cutthroat win-at-all-costs deck all the time. If your favorite Pokémon is Charizard, and you absolutely, positively must put him in your deck, go ahead. It may affect your deck's performance, and you might not win as much if Charizard doesn't fit your theme, but at least you'll have fun when you do get him out. And there's nothing better than building a deck with your favorite cards and winning. It's a difficult task, but it can be done.

Remember, it's just a game. But what a game!

The Complete Guide to Pokémon Trading Card Game

by Omeed Dariani

Trad trading for Pokémon cards is a challenging endeavor. Because there are hundreds of cards in multiple languages, inexperienced Pokémon traders have a challenging time just keeping up with the cards, let alone making a successful trade. Trading is also a great way to meet players, especially on the first few visits to a new store. Typically, there will be a crowd of people sitting at a table or on the floor, with trade binders open. This is where the trading is done. The first thing to do is to get over there; it takes people to trade.

TYPES OF TRADERS

Though every individual will present a different set of challenges, there are several general types of traders. By becoming acquainted with them, you can learn to anticipate what sorts of cards a player will want, before you even hand over your binder.

The Kid. The Kid tends to have discovered the card game through the Game Boy games or school friends. For this sort of trader, playing takes a back seat to collecting. The Kid wants to “catch ’em all,” and is looking for rare Pokémon. The Kid tends to value rare, especially holofoil, Pokémon much higher than trainer cards. Trading with the Kid is a good way to get rid of your extra Articuno and Moltres cards in exchange for some of the more powerful trainers, like Computer Search and Item Finder.

The New Player. Though more interested in the actual card game, the New Player is relatively inexperienced. This inexperience leads the New Player to evaluate tournament-quality Pokémon poorly. It takes players a little while to understand why Charizard is very difficult to incorporate into winning decks. As such, the New Player tends to go after the big guys, like Charizard and Dragonite, while freely trading away great but less powerful-looking Pokémon like Hitmonchan and Electabuzz.

The Experienced Player. Most good players fall into this category. The Experienced Player has the know-how and understands the concepts of trading, but usually lacks a huge amount of cards. Trading with the Experienced Player can be difficult to predict, as, in his or her eyes, desirable cards are reflected simply by a lack of them. The Experienced Player typically wants top-level cards, like Computer Search, Alakazam, and Hitmonchan. It is sometimes difficult to trade with this type of trader, as you may not have many of the cards he or she wants. Don't be discouraged if you reach an impasse.

The Have-It-All. The name says it all. This person has most anything you could want. He or she tends to be a very experienced player who has done tons of trading and can be a bit hard-edged. He or she will often only be looking for your very best cards. When trading with the Have-It-All, it is smart to remember that he or she probably wants your First Edition holofoil Hitmonlee because it is a First Edition holofoil, not because it is Hitmonlee. Because of this, and because the Have-It-All probably has five Hitmonlees lying around already, you are in a position to swap. You could give up your First Edition holofoil for a Second Edition non-holofoil and a few other cards. Most Have-It-Alls are more than happy to accommodate these kinds of trades.

BEFORE YOU TRADE

Before you trade, before you sit down, before you even leave your house, it is a good idea to do these few things:

• Put your cards in a binder.

This cannot be overstressed. In addition to looking unpleasant and disorganized, loose cards get lost or stolen. Spending five dollars on a three-ring binder and some card pages goes miles toward saving you time and trouble.

• Familiarize. Know rarities and editions, first. After that, it is important to realize which cards are hot in the area.

Remember that price guides reflect the average price of cards across the whole country, not in specific locales. On top of that, certain cards are often in higher demand in certain areas, driving their prices up. Similarly, some cards may not have as high a value as they do in the guide, due to lack of demand. Because of these minor fluxes, it is possible to get some cards for a lot less than what they are worth in a price guide.

• Prioritize. Decide which cards are worth trading for and which are not. This is largely a matter of which cards you need. It is good to have a mental inventory of desirable cards, not a written one. By keeping the list in your head, you minimize the amount of information you give away to traders, which gives you an advantage.

• Decide. One of the most agonizing things about trading with a person is when only certain cards he or she shows you are for trade. It can be supremely frustrating when the other person refuses to trade any of the good cards in his or her binder. Make sure that your trade binder only contains cards that are definitely for trading. This will also help you keep track of what you have — and you'll never accidentally trade a card that you meant to keep.

AS YOU TRADE

Once you're sitting down and trading, it pays to keep these trading ideas in mind:

• Be nice. The first thing to remember is very simple. Be polite. Talk to the other person. Ask if it's OK before you pull any cards out of the other person's binder. Let them take their time. Most people like to spend a bit of time looking before deciding on what they want. Respect that. Be fair. Otherwise, no one is going to trade with you a second time. When the time comes to trade cards, don't make offers that are outrageously slanted in your favor. For example, don't offer to trade your common or uncommon cards for his Charizard. There will be times when people offer you trades that you think are wildly in your favor. Make sure they know what they're doing (especially if they're the Kid type), and, if you're certain they'll bear you no ill will, consider yourself lucky and make the trade.

• Take your time. Trading cards is a lot like playing cards — the more you know about the other player's "hand," the better position you will be in. Go over cards slowly and thoroughly. Look at all the cards offered; it will allow you to evaluate the other person's trading style, while letting you sneak a peek at what kinds of cards he or she wants. Don't pull anything out until you've looked through the entire binder. For example, if you pull out a few cards early before seeing the Alakazams you need on the back page, the other person is more likely to ask you to put the Alakazams back, and try to get you to trade for the so-so stuff you pulled from the front of the binder. Make sure you get the best cards you can.

• Examine the cards carefully. Unfortunately, there are some counterfeit cards in circulation, which can cause problems for honest traders. If a person has a fake card, it doesn't mean that he or she is trying to rip people off. People often don't recognize the counterfeits.

Compare all cards to some of yours before trading for them or ask other people for advice. If you are unsure if a card is authentic, do not trade for it.

• Let them make the offer. It's difficult to gauge what a person values a particular card at, so you can often get a better deal than you anticipated just by letting them make the initial offer. Some traders will trade very playable Pokémon for much less viable Pokémon. You'll never know that, though, unless you let them make the pitch.

• Never make a trade that isn't to your advantage. This is where all of the preparation comes in handy. Remember, a trade that is to your advantage doesn't have to be an unfair trade, just one that accomplishes something that you wanted to accomplish. Evaluate your trades well. For example, if you're getting a bunch of decent cards for your trade binder, but the other person wants a bunch of your best trade cards, there is no reason to trade, as that would weaken your trade binder. However, if this situation is reversed, you should trade, because it will improve your trade binder for the next trader. Just remember the note about being fair, above.

• Take a break. Every now and then, you should stop, pick up your cards and move away from the trade area for five minutes or so. Look through what you've obtained and think about what you still need. Otherwise, at the end of the day, you may end up with six copies of a card when you only needed two! Also, take this time to put newly acquired trade cards into your trade binder; they won't do you any good, otherwise.

The most important thing about trading is remembering that it is optional. No one can force anyone to trade. Make sure you are comfortable trading the cards that you are trading. Don't allow another trader to pressure you into rushing, try to trick you into a bad trade, or make a trade that you don't want to make. If you are uncomfortable, for any reason, remember that you can just walk away. No one is going to hold it against you if you change your mind or just don't want to make a trade. When you're done, regardless of anything else, thank the other person for letting you look through his or her cards.

Trading, much like playing, is both an art and a science. As with a Pokémon tournament, half of the battle is being prepared. The other half is keeping calm and making the right "plays." Getting the most out of your trades is a great way to make new friends, while acquiring the cards you need.

the POKÉMON TRADING CARD GAME™

by Ka-Lok Fung

Promotional cards (also known as promos) add an interesting element to any collectible card game. Collectors like them for their art and rarity, while players like them for the unique game mechanics they provide. Pokémon is no different. With many of these cards tournament-playable, more and more of these promos are showing themselves in decks.

Promo cards can be very difficult to collect. At Pokémon The First Movie: Mewtwo Strikes Back, many of the promotional cards were gone within three days. To help collectors and players alike, Wizards of the Coast has created a special numbered promo series. This set allows collectors to organize their promo cards and provides players with an easy way to refer to cards without describing the cards in excruciating detail. Cards in the promo series differ from regular cards by having unique art, different game mechanics, or both. These cards can be identified by the number on the lower right hand corner and a special logo (the word "promo" over a black star).

There are currently 12 promo series cards in existence, with more to come. Besides the cards in this series, there are also other Pokémon promos based upon previously published cards in the main sets (Base, Jungle, Fossil, Team Rocket, and soon, Gym Leaders and Neo). A relatively complete list can be found in the sidebar. Most Pokémon promos made by Wizards of the Coast can be found in Pokémon-related merchandise and promotions.

Promo Series Cards in Focus

Promo #1: Pikachu (60 HP)

[1] Growl. If the Defending Pokémon attacks Pikachu during your opponent's next turn, any damage done by the attack is reduced by 10 (after applying Weakness and Resistance). (Benching either Pokémon ends this effect.)

[LL] Thundershock (20). Flip a coin. If heads, the Defending Pokémon is now Paralyzed.

Pikachu is probably the most popular Pokémon in the world. In this incarnation, Pikachu's above-average HP and low-cost Thundershock combine to make an excellent Active Pokémon. Throw in the Growl defensive attack and Pikachu may be serving as a starter in Lightning decks in Pokémon games at a Pokémon League near you.

Promo #2: Electabuzz (60 HP)

[L] Light Screen. Whenever an attack does damage to Electabuzz (after applying Weakness and Resistance) during your opponent's next turn, that attack only does half the damage to Electabuzz (rounded down to the nearest 10). (Any other effects of attacks still happen.)

[2] Quick Attack (10+). Flip a coin. If heads, this attack does 10 damage plus 20 more damage; if tails, this attack does 10 damage.

The Base Set Electabuzz has been a staple of Haymaker decks from the beginning. How is this Electabuzz different from that one? The promotional Electabuzz is geared more toward defense than offense with its Light Screen attack and 60 HP. The Quick Attack has the potential to deal 30 damage but, all in all, it doesn't live up to its BBP (Big Basic Pokémon) cousin in Base Set. Electabuzz would do well in a minor defensive role in Pokémon decks.

Promos #3, 4: Mewtwo/Alternative Art (DVD/Video) Mewtwo (70 HP)

[P] Energy Absorption. Choose up to 2 Energy cards from your discard pile and attach them to Mewtwo.

[PP1] Psyburn (40).

When news of this promotional Mewtwo first broke out, many called this card broken and asked Wizards of the Coast to ban it. The company refused to do so and was justified. When the card was released to the general public, cries for banning soon stopped, as people realized that Mewtwo was not as "broken" as originally thought, because it took two turns for it to power up and many decks included Pokémon which had resistance to Psychic Pokémon. Nevertheless, Mewtwo is still a very powerful card when played at the right time. Serious Pokémon maniacs should know that Mewtwo fits best in aggressive, hard-hitting decks.

Promo #5: Pikachu (50 HP)

[L] Recharge. Search your deck for a [L] Energy card and attach it to Pikachu. Shuffle your deck afterward.

Rumoured

- Venusaur (from Pokémon TCG Trainer's Guide)

[LLL] Thunderbolt (50). Discard all Energy cards attached to Pikachu in order to use this attack.

Ash's furry friend, Pikachu, makes another appearance here as promotional card #4. Of all the different Pikachu in the English Pokémon series, this Pikachu has the ability to deal the highest damage. Unfortunately, it takes a minimum of two turns to power its Thunderbolt. Furthermore, the Thunderbolt attack requires the discard of all attached energy cards. Because of these factors, this Pikachu has not experienced much play, in either the casual scene or the tournament scene. That said, this Pikachu may fit in decks that allow Pokémon to be built up on the Bench before attacking.

Promo #6: Dragonite (40 HP)

Pokémon Power: Special Delivery. Once during your turn (before your attack) you may draw a card. If you do, then choose a card from your hand and place on top of your deck.

[3] Supersonic Flight (60). Flip a coin. If tails, this attack does nothing.

Because it has become known that Dragonites have "circumnavigated the earth in 16 hours," a Japanese airliner asked Creatures (the Japanese maker of the Pokémon CCG) to make a promotional card in honor of this dragon Pokémon. Dragonite reciprocated this favor by making a "Special Delivery." Special Delivery was a Pokémon Power that had little effect on the airliner but a major effect on Dragonite trainers.

The Pokémon Power allows a trainer to draw a card from the draw deck and replace it with a card from the trainer's hand. Many trainers soon realized that this could be advantageous in various game situations. The combination of Pokédex and Special Delivery was even better, giving trainers an instant mini-Bill.

Promo #7: Arcanine (70 HP)

[2] Quick Attack (10+). Flip a coin. If heads, this attack does 10 damage plus 20 more damage; if tails, this attack does 10 damage.

[FF] Flames of Rage (40+). Discard 2 [F] Energy cards attached to Arcanine in order to use this attack. This attack does 40 damage plus 10 more damage for each damage counter on Arcanine.

At first glance, the Arcanine promo may seem inferior to the one from Base Set, but it has some nice advantages. This Arcanine can attack quicker and its Flames of Rage is very useful. By the time Growlithe evolves into Arcanine, it may already have a number of damage counters. Thus, once evolved with this Stage I card, Flames of Rage would devastate the Defending Pokémon by attacking for 50 to 100 damage. Look for Promo #6 to show up in quick-to-hit fire decks.

Promo #8: Jigglypuff (50 HP)

[1] First Aid. Remove 1 damage counter from Jigglypuff.

[3] Double-edge (40). Jigglypuff does 20 damage to itself.

The musically talented Jigglypuff packs more punch in this promo, but aside from this, it is inferior to the Jigglypuff found in Pokémon Jungle.

Not only has the cost for Jigglypuff's attacks increased in this promo, but its HP has dropped. Unless there is a good reason to use this version, leave this promo inside the binder and use the Jungle Jigglypuff instead.

Promos #9, 10: Mew/Foil Mew (50 HP)

[P] Psywave (10x). Does 10 damage times the member of Energy cards attached to the Defending Pokémon.

[PP] Devolution Beam. Choose an evolved Pokémon (your own or your opponent's). Return the highest Stage Evolution card on that Pokémon to its player's hand. That Pokémon is no longer Asleep, Confused, Paralyzed, Poisoned, or anything else that might be the result of an attack (just as if you had evolved it).

In the Pokémon world, Mew is the most sought-after Pokémon after Charizard. In the Pokémon CCG, Mew is highly collectible and powerful. Its Psywave attack brings down even the biggest Pokémon and its Devolution Beam can Knock Out Stage I and Stage 2 Pokémon by lowering (in de-evolving) the Defending Pokémon's HP.

Imagine the shock The Defending Blastoise's trainer gets when Blastoise reverts to Squirtle, just because he or she had used Pokémon Breeder to evolve Squirtle quickly! Mew will do well in any Psychic deck that needs an aggressive punch or needs innovative ways to Knock Out Defending Pokémon.

Promo #11: Meowth (50 HP)

[2] Cat Punch. Flip a coin. If heads, this attack does 20 damage. If tails and if your opponent has any Benched Pokémon, he or she chooses 1 of them and this attack does 20 damage to it. (Don't apply Weakness and Resistance for Benched Pokémon.)

Besides being Jesse and James' scratch cat, Meowth is the only Pokémon that can talk in human-speak. Here, he expresses his fighting prowess with a "Cat Punch." The Cat Punch's ability to attack both Active and Benched Pokémon is very useful, especially in decks that focus on building Bench forces or that focus on a defensive theme.

He should definitely be considered for any deck that uses a Bench destruction strategy.

Promo #12: Mewtwo (60 HP)

Please note the following text is preliminary as we went to print. Some details may change.

[P] Energy Control. Flip a coin. If heads, you may move 1 Energy card from the Defending Pokémon to another.

[PPP] Telekinesis. If your opponent has any Benched Pokémon, choose 1 of them and this attack does 30 damage to it. (Don't apply Weakness and Resistance for Benched Pokémon.)

Mewtwo, promotional card #12, is geared more towards defense than offense. Its Energy Control may stall opponents who are desperate for energy, while its Telekinesis may become an effective solution for Wiggly decks which depend on a filled Bench to do 60 damage per turn.

Unfortunately, the relatively high cost of Telekinesis prevents this Mewtwo promo from being the best anti-Wiggly card.

If you're looking for a Mewtwo that packs punch, stick with the Base Set Mewtwo but, if you need a defensive Mewtwo, stick with this one.

decks that rule!

by Omeed Dariani

The Team Rocket expansion brings some very useful cards to Pokémon trainers. One of the best concepts for deck building is Pokémon redundancy. Before Team Rocket, most of the popular evolution chains were limited by the deck-building rules, as each player is limited to four copies of each card. Thanks to the multiple versions of basic Pokémon like Squirtle, Charmander, Abra, and Machop, a player can rely on a single evolution chain more heavily by playing up to eight copies of the basic Pokémon. In addition, each evolution chain receives some new choices, allowing players a lot of freedom in deck design. The two decks presented here reflect some of the best ways to incorporate Team Rocket into competitive Pokémon.

Control Haymaker

The Control Haymaker deck is a twist on the older straight Fighting Haymaker. Hitmonchan, as always, is an incredible leadoff Pokémon, with high HP and strong attacks. The six Machops make it easier to evolve him. While the Team Rocket Machop isn't as good in combat as the Base Set version, it is still the same Machop on the bench. They aren't really for early combat, anyway. The key is to build up and evolve Machop into Dark Machoke, while fighting up front with a Hitmonchan. There is a key play with this deck that usually devastates an opponent.

Once Dark Machoke is in fighting condition, move him up front. The new Dark Machamp has a crippling attack in Throw Out, which strips all of the energy off of an opponent's active Pokémon at relatively little cost. Because of this, once Machamp is active, an opponent has few options. The key is to use the Pull Out attack with Dark Machoke once and pull up the opponent's best Pokémon. On the next turn, evolve Machoke into Machamp and Throw Out that Pokémon, which should all but flatten that Pokémon. As long as the chosen Pokémon doesn't have a resistance to Fighting, it should be knocked out with ease. Only very small Pokémon will be able to retreat, and the opposing Pokémon will have few attacks accessible, making Machamp almost invulnerable. If the active Pokémon has a good one-energy attack, like a Hitmonchan, the Super Potion will allow Machamp to outrace the damage.

Another major problem is a Pokémon with resistance to Fighting. Thanks to Machoke's active Pokémon switching ability, the first one should be easy to remove but, after that, it will become a problem again. To combat this, Control Haymaker uses Gusts of Wind, which will allow a player to garner more knock outs before having to deal with the Fighting-resistant Pokémon. To get the final knock outs in this instance, the deck has one Scyther, which works very well, in general — and is a nice leadoff against other Fighting decks. In addition, the Potion Energy cards are nice additions to the deck, providing a little bit of damage removal without compromising the overall structure of the deck.

The entire deck is built around acceleration, and is designed to allow a trainer to blaze through, finding the cards he or she needs. Four Professor Oaks and four Bills grant massive card drawing, while the three Computer Searches make it possible to find almost anything required for any given situation. Because of its speed, this deck should be fully active on turn five — ready to lock an opponent out of the game.

Damage Swap

Damage Swap decks took a huge hit with the release of Fossil. Between Muk and Aerodactyl, it was a big risk to rely on Alakazam's Damage Swap Pokémon Power. Now, thanks to

- 2x Gambler (FS)
- 1x Professor Oak (BS)
- 1x Sleep! (TR)
- 4x Goop Gas Attack (TR)

a couple of Team Rocket cards, Damage Swap is in a much better position. First, with eight Abras, the deck is virtually guaranteed to draw one in the opening hand. Because of this and the intense amount of search ability in this deck, Abra is easily turned into Alakazam as soon as it is desirable. Between Computer Search, Item Finder, Professor Oak, and Pokémon Trader, almost any card in the deck is accessible at any time. The combo is the same as always — use the search abilities to find Abra, Alakazam, and Pokémon Breeder, then abuse Damage Swap by using high HP Pokémon, like Chansey and Kangaskhan, and damage removers like Scoop Up and Pokémon Center. Overall, the end strategy is to run your opponent out of cards quickly and quietly. Because certain Pokémon Powers, like Aerodactyl's and Muk's, totally destroy this deck, it has seen some decrease in popularity. The inclusions of Goop Gas Attack and Sleep! give Damage Swap some defenses against those two powerful Pokémon. Though neither solution is permanent, this deck can use the windows of opportunity provided to swap some damage counters around and forestall the use of a Pokémon Center a few additional turns. By this method, Damage Swap can win a game that would likely be a lost cause.

Team Rocket adds some neat tricks to existing decks as well as enhancing the playability of decks wanting to feature a single evolutionary chain, by adding to the variations on existing Pokémon. The super-cool new energy cards can mess up the math just enough to swing a game, and cards like Scatter! Sticky Gas breathe new life into combo-oriented decks, like Damage Swap. Look for Team Rocket to slowly seep into tournament decks everywhere.

I've played with the idea of swapping one or two of the Potions for Super Potions. And one of the Professor Oaks for another Bill. Well, here it is and please, no laughing...it might hurt the Pokémon's feelings!

I think 30 energy is a bit much. I'd remove three or four right off. With the Team Rocket expansion, there are also a lot of new colorless energies that should be a lot of fun to put in your decks. Replace some of your colored energies with those. Use the additional space you have from taking out your energies to add more trainers, like a pair of Bills and maybe some PlusPowers — your Pokémon's attacks could use a little beefing up.

I wouldn't include Jigglypuff without Wigglytuff, so either find room for it or take it out. If you take them out, I'd suggest Lickitung. He's a great high-HP colorless Pokémon. Good luck!

New ideas

Poképlayer writes:

I'm a 13-year-old and I think I'm a good deck builder but I could use an opinion from someone really skilled. There are always the main decks, like Raindance and Haymaker, but I like to go for new ideas for decks. One of my best ideas was a great energy-removal deck that plays great as well. The object of the deck is to completely shut down all energy on your opponent's Pokémon.

Pokémon

- 4x Golduck
 - 3x Psyduck
 - 4x Poliwhirl
 - 3x Poliwhirl
 - 2x Poliwrath
 - 4x Dratini
 - 3x Dragonair
- ### Trainers
- 4x Super Energy Removal
 - 4x Energy Removal
 - 2x Gambler
 - 2x Professor Oak
- ### Energy
- 21x Water Energy
 - 4x Double Colorless Energy

All of the furthest evolved forms have the ability to remove energy from the Defending Pokémon. Psyduck is a good starter at the beginning while you build up a Poliwrath or a Dragonair on the Bench. The Super Energy Removal and Energy Removal cards will take care of your opponent's Benched Pokémon. In terms of Weakness and Resistance, the only real weakness of this deck is a Grass/Electric deck. A couple of Computer Search cards could go into this deck but I can't find the room. Any opinions?

You've got a good theme going. My major concern would be the lack of energy in your own deck and the speed of getting your Poliwrath cards out. Remember that Super Energy Removal costs you an energy tag, so you need to put a few extra in to make sure you don't run out yourself. Also, as a Stage 2 Pokémon, Poliwrath will be awfully tough to get out without trainers that let you search through your deck, and its unevolved forms aren't so hot.

So, once we remove the Poliwhirl family, what do we put in? Since your objective is to shut down your opponent's Pokémon, you can also try giving them bad statuses (like confusion and paralysis) in addition to removing their energy. This will frustrate the opponent even more and might make them waste their precious energy on the wrong Pokémon. Lapras is a good choice, but his rarity might make him difficult to get. Articuno is also nice, but he has the additional disadvantage of high-priced attacks. If all else fails, you might try Shellder and Cloyster, but watch out for their low HP.

In any case, you should have room for those Computer Search cards, plus a few more energies. If you can squeeze them in, one or two Gust of Wind cards might also be nice, as they'll let you get a helpless Pokémon (in other words, one you've been removing energy from all game) off the Bench and up for a whipping. Good luck!

Hitmon deck

Johnny writes:

I'm a Star Wars CCG player and I've recently taken up Pokémon as well. I have built a couple of Pokémon decks and have a large base of cards. I built this deck when my best friend's brother suggested it. He is a great Magic player, so I took his advice. The deck is called the Hitmon Deck:

Pokémon

- 4x Hitmonchan
- 4x Hitmonlee
- 4x Machop
- 4x Scyther

Trainers

- 4x Bill
- 1x Professor Oak
- 4x Energy Removal
- 2x Super Energy Removal
- 4x Gust of Wind
- 4x Switch

Energy

- 25x Fighting Energy

The point of this deck is let Scyther take a beating, then once your Hitmon cards are built up, switch and beat down opposing Pokémon. It has rarely lost, but all the losses are from Psychic-type decks. Is there anything I can do to stop this?

I think you've got good defenses against Psychic decks with your Energy Removal and Gust of Wind cards. But I can see how you'd have problems, since your big Pokémon are all weak against Psychic and same Psychic Pokémon are resistant to Fighting.

Keeping a Scyther alive and powered up can be a great help against Psychic decks. You might also consider replacing Scyther with some Lickitung cards, which are resistant to Psychic, have a lot of HP, and can inflict bad statuses. Its only problem is its huge retreat cost, but hopefully you can get a Switch when you need one. Look into other colorless Pokémon with Psychic Resistances, like Jigglypuff, Eevee, and Rattata if you want further protection.

Big Eggsplotation

Daisuke writes:

I am an 18-year-old who loves to play Pokémon. I read your section in Scrye every time a new issue comes out. It's so interesting! I'm wondering if you can take a look at my deck, which I call Big Eggsplotation:

Pokémon

- 4x Bulbasaur
- 3x Ivysaur
- 2x Venusaur
- 4x Exeggcute
- 3x Exeggutor
- 2x Pinsir
- 2x Scyther

Energy

- 17x Grass Energy
- 3x Double Colorless Energy

Trainers

- 4x Computer Search
- 3x Bill
- 2x Professor Oak
- 3x Switch
- 2x Pokémon Breeder
- 2x Pokémon Trader
- 4x Pokémon Center

This purpose of this deck is to deal large amounts of damage with Exeggutor. One problem that I'm having is putting energy on it fast enough because of the one energy per turn rule, and I also have to look after the other Pokémon as well. If you have any advice, it is greatly appreciated.

I think you need more energy in general. 20 just isn't enough for a deck that relies on it so much. You need at least four, and maybe six more. I'd take out the Pokémon Center cards — you don't need four of them, especially if you're worried about getting energy on the right Pokémon. I'm not sure you need a full four Computer Search cards, either. With two Pokémon Trader cards, two Searches, and three Exeggutor cards, you should be able to get what you need into play.

That leaves room for six more cards, but I don't know about making all of them energy. I'd put in two Super Potion cards and four energy (including a fourth Double Colorless Energy). That way, you can heal your important Exeggutor when you need it. Venusaur is a good idea for getting the energy where you need it, but I don't know of any way to overcome the one-per-turn limit except with Blastoise, and that doesn't help you. The best advice I can give is that you shouldn't be afraid to have a big Pokémon like Scyther or Pinsir sit out there and take damage while you build up on the Bench. It's a good strategy to leave one Pokémon out as a wall to absorb damage while you get your major strategy going. Losing one Prize this way can often be worth the wait. Just remember that your opponent will be building up on his Bench, too!

The World of JUNGLE

by Ka-Lok Fung

When the first expansion to the Pokémon CCG arrived in the summer of 1999, players dove in with a vengeance. What did they find in Jungle?

New cards, boosts to grass and colorless decks, new themes, new strategies, and the absolute of rare Pokémon's totalitarian grip on Pokémon powers. Let's take a look at the Jungle Pokémon who made an impact on the Pokémon gaming scene:

Dodrio: Doduo has evolved! Dodrio's rage attack may be weak, but its Pokémon power is simply amazing. The ability to retreat an Active Pokémon for one less colorless, makes the retreat costs of heavy hitters, such as Blastoise, Charizard, and Venusaur, less daunting. Furthermore, Pokémon with a retreat cost of one may now, with Dodrio, retreat for free. Add in its own free retreat cost and resistance to fighting Pokémon and you will have a cost-efficient Pokémon!

Eevee: Dubbed the versatile Pokémon, Eevee is both a defensive and attacking Pokémon. Tail wag can prevent defending Pokémon from attacking, while quick attack can be pumped up to do a nasty 30HP damage. Put Eevee together with its Stage 1 cousins, Flareon, Jolteon, and Vaporeon, plus 4 Poké Balls and you will have the foundation for the ultimate metagame deck!

Exeggcute: Can it be true? A grass Pokémon that needs Psychic Energy to attack? Yes! An adapted version of Bulbasaur, Exeggcute's hypnosis will make defending Pokémon fall asleep, while leech seed will act like a mini-Potion for Exeggcute. Expect Exeggcute to play a part in Venusaur/Alakazam Pokémon Center decks.

Jigglypuff: This little Pokémon may be cute, but it's very deadly. Having rendered the opponent asleep with lullaby, Jigglypuff will pound its way to victory. Not bad for a Pokémon who has 60HP and "a mysteriously soothing melody!"

Kangaskhan: This Pokémon can play a role in any deck archetype. Do you want more cards in your hand? Call on Kangaskhan to fetch a card for you. Is that defending Pokémon becoming tiresome? Tell Kangaskhan to do some stellar damage with comet punch. This Pokémon is an attacker and a staller all wrapped up into one.

Lickitung: Jungle's version of Onix, minus harden. Like Onix, Lickitung's HP is 90. However, its tongue wrap attack has an added bonus to Onix's rock throw—a chance for paralysis. Furthermore, its resistance to psychic Pokémon will make it an excellent companion to fighting Pokémon. Watch out for it in stall decks.

Mankey: What can I say? It's a Pokémon who has gone James Bond. Mankey's peek Pokémon power allows you to spy on virtually any card in play. It may not serve well as an Active Pokémon, but it'll be awesome to the bench. Look out 007, there's competition from a Pokémon with a zero retreat cost that can be as quick as you!

Marowak: A Bonekeeper, Marowak must have a lot of connections. Its call for friend attack can retrieve any basic fighting Pokémon: Onix, Machop, Sandshrew, Mankey, Rhyhorn, Hitmonchan, or Cubone. Furthermore, its bonemerang can deal 60HP damage. Pokémon trainers: Are any of your bones willing to risk Marowak's bones?

Mr. Mime: Blastoise's rain dance has led to an incredible deck archetype. Mr. Mime's invisible wall will probably lead to powerful, psychic-based stall decks with Mewtwo and Kadabra. The ability to prevent damage makes decks that are centered on brute force obsolete, as Mr. Mime denies their 30HP+ attacks. Meditate isn't something to laugh at either, as its potency increases with the number of damage counters on the defending Pokémon.

Nidoran (Female): Nidoran (F) opens up new dimensions for an under-utilized color. Are your games ending too quickly? Use Nidoran (F)'s call for family attack to bring both male and female Nidorans into play. Tired of Nidoran (M)'s inability to horn hazard defending Pokémon? Take a look at fury swipes. It has a greater chance of success. Look out for Nidoranama (Nidoran and Evolutions) decks in all levels of play at a local store near you.

Pikachu: You just can't get enough of this all-time favorite Pokémon! How is this Pikachu different from the version in the Base Set? Let's see. Its HP has risen to 50 and its spark attack does 20 damage to the defending Pokémon and deals 10 damage to an opponent's benched Pokémon. Chansey Wall decks be aware! Pikachu has come to ruin your day!

Poké Ball: Frustrated at the lack of Pokémon on the bench? Are your Pokémon constantly hiding in your draw deck? Look no further. This trainer card will alleviate some of your Pokémon troubles by giving you a chance to get any Pokémon into your hand. With four of these in your deck, your bench will always be filled! Combine Poké Ball with Pokémon Breeder and you'll get a Stage 2 Pokémon into play for sure!

Rapidash: Stomp will deal 20HP and agility will deal 30HP damage, but Rapidash's best characteristic is its free retreat cost! With the release of Jungle, Beedrill is no longer the only high-level Pokémon with a zero retreat cost. Rapidash, the fastest Pokémon with a zero retreat cost, will be able to attack with 100% accuracy (i.e., no coin flipping to determine the base damage).

Rhydon: An uncommon 100HP fighting Pokémon? You betcha. Horn attack for 30 and ram for 50 will knock out many defending Pokémon. However, use ram sparingly as it will bench the defending Pokémon and Rhydon will deal 20 damage to himself.

Rhyhorn: Like Kadabra, Rhyhorn is both a defender and an attacker. Leer can prevent attacks, while horn attack does a hefty 30. All of this packed into a 70HP basic Pokémon. It can't get better than this!

Scyther: A free retreat basic Pokémon, Scyther's skills are simply amazing. Its slash can be doubled up to do 60HP damage with swords dance, while its resistance to fighting Pokémon is very impressive. Put Scyther together with Pinsir, Nidoran (F), Kangaskhan, Energy Removals, and Super Energy Removals, and you'll have the foundation for a grass-based haymaker deck!

Seaking: With many tournament-level decks using some variation of energy removal/denial, many decks have been frustrated by the inability to attack due to the fact that their Pokémon require 2+ energy to attack. That wouldn't happen with Seaking. Seaking can attack for 10HP with only one Water Energy. Energy removal decks beware! There is now a counter Pokémon!

Weepinbell: For the same retreat cost as Bellsprout, Weepinbell is a Hitmonchan and Electabuzz put together. Its first attack, poisonpowder, strikes for 10HP damage with a chance to poison (like Electabuzz's thundershock) while its second attack, razor leaf, strikes for 30HP (like Hitmonchan's special punch). However, it's important to note that while Weepinbell is a Stage 1 Pokémon, both Hitmonchan and Electabuzz are basic 70HP Pokémon.

Jungle changed the Pokémon CCG — and it would soon change again. Read on...

by Ka-Lok Fung

With the release of Pokémon: Fossil in the fall of 1999, all of the original 150 Pokémon were now represented. Unfortunately, unlike in the Japanese Fossil set, Mew did not make its appearance here, to the dismay of Pokémaniacs. Instead, Wizards of the Coast released it as a promo card in conjunction with Pokémon League activities.

Even though the absence of Mew is sad, true Pokémon Trainers relished the fact that there were 42 new Pokémon and 5 new Trainers in Fossil. The Psychic and Water evolution lines derived the greatest benefit from this expansion, receiving 20 of the 42 new Pokémon cards. There were plenty of new themes and new strategies to explore!

Let's take a look at the cards that made an impact on the Pokémon CCG gaming scene:

Aerodactyl: A Fighting Pokémon that is resistant to its own kind, Aerodactyl's Pokémon Power sets it apart from the rest of the Pokémon. It prevents other Pokémon from evolving. Evolution intensive decks now have a formidable foe—a first stage prehistoric bird. How will they deal with it?

Gambler: Another trainer from the Fossil set, Gambler fits well into a Rain Dance deck. Maintenance is no longer the only card that can put cards from your hand back into your draw deck. Gambler has climbed the stairs to join this privileged rank. Furthermore, Gambler is superior to Maintenance, in some ways, because it gives you a chance to draw eight cards—seven more than Maintenance and one more than Professor Oak.

Gastly: Fossil's Gastly is a lot better than its Basic Set counterpart. Higher HP, an attack that does damage, and an attack that acts like Energy Retrieval, have all made Gastly a stronger Pokémon. Maintaining its free retreat cost and resistance to Fighting Pokémon, the Gastly in Pokémon Fossil is vastly superior.

Geodude: In the Pokémon TV series, Geodude is one of Brock's Pokémon. In the Pokémon card game, Geodude can also serve its Trainer very well. Its Stone Barrage has the potential to knock out Charizard (even though it is a 0.02% chance). Geodude is a tough little Pokémon that packs a lot of power into its 44 pounds. It should be seriously considered for any Fighting deck.

Haunter: The HP of Fossil's Haunter has dropped to 50, but this drop is compensated for by adding a Pokémon Power—the ability to make an attack fail. In the long run, this Pokémon Power should drive your opponent crazy, as attacks from their Pokémon will constantly result in failure. This makes Haunter a great addition to a Psychic-based stall deck.

Hitmonlee:

Hitmonchan's high-kicking relative, Hitmonlee, will work well in a Haymaker deck. Its Stretch Kick is able to strike at Pokémon on the opponent's Bench, while its 50 HP damaging Jump Kick packs enough power to knock out many Basic Pokémon. As long as Hitmonlee is Active, your opponent's Bench won't be safe!

Hypno: Drowzee's first stage evolution, Hypno, may not be much of a fighter but it excels at special attacks. One attack allows you to rearrange the top three cards in the opponent's deck, while the other does 10 HP damage to an opponent's Benched Pokémon. Add in Hypno's high HP and rather low retreat cost, and you'll have a well-rounded Pokémon.

Lapras: A Basic Poké-

mon, Lapras takes the best of Poliwhag and Drowzee and puts it all together in one little package. The Water Gun attack is boostable and can be used to do up to 30 HP damage and Confuse Ray can be used to confuse big, nasty Pokémon. Add in Lapras' high HP and we hear calls for a water-based Haymaker deck.

Magmar: A high HP Basic Pokémon, Magmar will do well in any "bum, burn, burn" deck. Its Smoke Screen will make your opponent's attacks fail and its Smog attack adds the poison ability to the fire arsenal. Although the Base Set Magmar is much more aggressive, Fossil's Magmar is much more progressive and provides some desperately needed defensive capabilities for Fire decks.

Muk: Muk is not a heavy attacker, but its incredible Pokémon Power forces people to take a good look at it. Muk prevents any other Pokémon Power from being used. If Fossil was going to become dominant in the metagame, Blastoise's Rain Dance would no longer be feasible. Charizard's Energy Burn would be useless and Alakazam's Damage Swap would be impossible. Muk, the 70 HP, Stage 1 Pokémon, could change the world of the Pokémon CCG as we know it today!

Mr. Fuji: A possible successor to Scoop Up, Mr. Fuji is a Trainer that nicely complements the Haymaker deck. It allows you to retrieve a Benched Pokémon and "put it and all of its attached cards into your draw deck." However, before you start replacing Scoop Ups with Mr. Fujis you may want to pay attention to this important fact—unlike Mr. Fuji, Scoop Up is able to retrieve an Active Pokémon. So before you trade all those Scoop Ups away, take some time to playtest Mr. Fuji before incorporating it permanently into your deck.

Recycle: Like Gambler, Recycle will make an excellent addition to a Rain Dance deck. Upon a successful flip of heads, you may take any card from your discard pile and put it into your draw deck. Add in Maintenance and Gambler and you'll have the foundation for an excellent replenishing engine—you'll never be decked again!

Once again, a Pokémon expansion changed the gaming world. And now, with Team Rocket, it's changing again!

POKÉMON™

Powers!

by Ka-Lok Fung

Pokémon Powers are valuable assets to Pokémon trainers. Just with Basic Set, Jungle, and Fossil, it's difficult to decide what Pokémon to include in a deck. One of several important things to look at while deck building is the Pokémon Powers available. Here is a list of the "best of the best" Pokémon Powers from those sets, in ascending order:

10 Haunter (FS) - Transparency
"Whenever an attack does anything to Haunter, flip a coin. If heads, prevent all effects of that attack, including damage, done to Haunter. This power stops working while Haunter is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Do you want to see your opponents frustrated? Perhaps you want to laugh at your opponent's Pokémon's inability to land a solid hit on your Active Pokémon. Try the Gas Pokémon Haunter. It stops attacks from all directions with Transparency. Ghostbusters don't exist in the Pokémon CCG, so people will find it extremely difficult to Knock Out Haunter.

9 Dodrio (JN) - Retreat Aid
"As long as Dodrio is Benched, pay [1] less to retreat your Active Pokémon."

Dodrio is one of those Pokémon that is better suited for the Bench. The Pokémon's Rage attack is very weak, but its Pokémon Power, Retreat Aid, simplifies many of the problems associated with high retreat costs. For example, Dodrio will do well in evolution-intensive decks because it makes the retreat cost for Stage 2 "biggies" such as Charizard and Venusaur easier to handle.

8 Mankey (JN) - Peek
"Once during your turn (before your attack), you may look at one of the following: the top card of either player's deck, a random card from your opponent's hand, or one of either player's Prizes."

Any expert CCG player can tell you that the most important thing you need to do to win a strategy-intensive game is determine your opponent's strategy. In Pokémon, Mankey can help you achieve this goal. By allowing you to look at virtually any card in the game, Mankey, the "perfect Pig Monkey spy," can help you prepare a strong defense and set up an impeccable offense.

7 Omanyte (FS) - Clairvoyance
"Your opponent plays with his or her hand face up. This power stops working while Omanyte is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Do veteran Pokémon players seem to know what you're up to? Are they able to counteract any offense that you set up? Well, Omanyte's Clairvoyance can give you the required edge over the competition. With the advantage of being able to see what is in your opponent's hand, you'll be launching attacks with the full knowledge of your opponent's defensive and offensive capabilities.

6 Blastoise (BS) - Rain Dance
"As often as you like during your turn (before your attack), you may attach 1 [Water Energy] card to 1 of your [Water] Pokémon. (This doesn't use up your 1 Energy card attachment for the turn.) This power can't be used if Blastoise is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

That you can only put down one energy card per turn is, perhaps, the biggest restriction of Pokémon. However, Blastoise can ignore this rule. Its Rain Dance Pokémon Power allows you to put as much energy as you want on your Water Pokémon. Therefore, as long as you have enough energy in your hand, a just-played Water Pokémon can use an attack which requires 2+ energy cards that turn. That's cool!

5 Mr. Mime (JN) - Invisible Wall
"Whenever an attack (including your own) does 30 or more damage to Mr. Mime (after applying Weakness and Resistance), prevent that damage. (Any other effects of attacks still happen.) This power can't be used if Mr. Mime is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Are you tired of Pokémon being Knocked Out in one shot? Are evolution-intensive decks common in areas where you play Pokémon? Are Rain Dance decks giving you headaches? If you answered yes to these questions, you may want to consider a Psychic deck involving Mr. Mime. This Barrier Pokémon stops these deck archetypes with its Invisible Wall Pokémon Power.

4 Alakazam (BS) - Damage Swap
"As often as you like during your turn, (before your attack), you may move 1 damage counter from 1 of your Pokémon to another as long as you don't Knock Out that Pokémon. This power can't be used if Alakazam is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Several of your Pokémon are barely surviving. Several others are at full hit points. You have no way of getting rid of those damage counters with Trainers. How are you going to solve this problem? Your answer is to bring in Alakazam. Alakazam, with its ability to transfer damage counters from one Pokémon to another, is a great way to prolong the lives of Pokémon on your team. Furthermore, teaming Alakazam up with high-HP Pokémon will force your opponents to come up with a good strategy to Knock Out your Pokémon.

3 Aerodactyl (FS) - Prehistoric Power
"No more Evolution cards can be played. This power stops working while Aerodactyl is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

As Pokémon evolve, they become stronger. Today, many tournament-level decks depend upon a specific Pokémon evolution line. Luckily, the latest Pokémon expansion has brought a card which can put an end to this archetype — Aerodactyl. This Fossil Pokémon thwarts any threat from Stage 1 and Stage 2 Pokémon. Bye-bye Rain Dance! Bye-bye Turbo Nidoking!

2 Muk (FS) - Toxic Gas
"Ignore all Pokémon Powers other than Toxic Gases. This power stops working while Muk is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Pokémon Powers are extremely useful abilities. They make the game more exciting and interesting. Sometimes, however, Pokémon Powers are used to the extent that they are abused. As a result, we looked for a Pokémon that could solve this problem. We found a Grass Pokémon named Muk, who, with Toxic Gas, could prevent Pokémon Powers from being abused. Forget Damage Swap, Alakazam! Your opponent is going to need some time to find an antidote for Muk's poison!

1 Ditto (FS) - Transform
"If Ditto is your Active Pokémon, treat it as if it were the same card as the Defending Pokémon, including type, Hit Points, Weakness, and so on, except Ditto can't evolve, always has this Pokémon Power, and you may treat any Energy attached to Ditto as Energy of any type. Ditto isn't a copy of any other Pokémon while Ditto is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed."

Is your opponent's Active Pokémon giving you a hard time? Turn the tables on your opponents by giving them a taste of their own medicine with Ditto! By copying most of your opponent's Active Pokémon's statistics - including hit points, attacks and Pokémon Powers - Ditto's able to use most of the skills on that Pokémon. With Transform, Ditto is one of the most valuable and versatile Pokémon in the Pokémon CCG!

Now, Team Rocket brings more Pokémon Powers. Be prepared for them!

The Elite Trainers

by Ka-Lok Fung

In the Pokémon CCG, Pokémon trainers not only have to choose the correct Pokémon for their deck, they also have to determine what trainer cards to include in their deck. Trainers can make or break a deck. To alleviate some of the pain from the gruesome chore of sorting through trainers that have come from the Pokémon Base Set and Pokémon Jungle, we'll examine their top 10 trainer cards (and themes). Without further ado, let's take a look at the best aids that Pokémon provides its trainers.

10. PokéBall (Jungle)

An essential for any Pokémon trainer, PokéBall comes in at number 10. This card is best suited for a deck that depends heavily on specific evolution lines, because this trainer gives you the ability to capture any Pokémon in your deck. However, like its Game Boy counterpart, it isn't 100% effective. Nevertheless, a 50% chance is much better than 0%. Now, if only there was a Master Ball!

9. Gambler (Fossil)

Gambler, a trainer from the new Pokémon Fossil set, comes in at number 9. Have you ever run dangerously low on draw cards? If you have, Gambler can be an excellent addition to your deck, because with Gambler, you have a chance to replenish your draw deck with cards from your hand. Since you automatically lose if you run out of draw cards at the beginning of your turn, there really aren't any ill side effects when you play this trainer near the end of the Pokémon match.

8. Gust of Wind (Unlimited)

Ash's Pidgeotto likes to make use of air. Its Whirlwind has brought Gust of Wind to position number 8. Gust of Wind is a versatile card. It is both a defensive and an offensive card. While it can be used to quickly knock out a Benched, weak Pokémon, it can also be used to put a nasty Active Pokémon onto the Bench. Handy in both the early, middle, and later stages of a Pokémon game, Gust of Wind has a place in many Pokémon decks.

7. PlusPower (Unlimited)

PlusPower comes in at number 7. Unlike North America, many Japanese Pokémon players like to use PlusPowers. In fact, when online

THE TOP 10 Trainers for your deck!

Pokémaniac Edward T. Hrzic III told Kouichi Ooyama, a person involved with Pokémon in Japan, that the use of PlusPowers in North America was uncommon, Ooyama was rather surprised. After all, an extra 10 HP damage, in theory, is quite small. Well, after reading this you may want to reconsider. The American Champion at the Pokémon Tropical Mega-Battle in Hawaii lost to the Japanese Champion who was playing a Haymaker Variation with PlusPowers! PlusPowers give decks the extra element of surprise. Your opponents may be expecting to survive for two more turns with their Active Pokémon but you'll ruin their day by pumping your Active Pokémon with PlusPowers.

6. Pokémon Center (Unlimited)

Whenever there's a Pokémon emergency, the Pokémon Center is your source of help. Nurse Joy has ushered in Pokémon Center to number 6. Pokémon Center's unique ability to remove all damage counters from all Pokémon makes this card powerful. Combine Pokémon Center with Venusaur's Energy Transfer and you can practically disregard Pokémon Center's "discard all energy attached" effect.

5. Scoop Up (Unlimited)

At number 5 is Scoop Up, a trainer that can ruin any opponent's day. Your Pokémon has only 10 HP left and is at the risk of being Knocked Out. What do you do? You play Scoop Up and you deny your opponent a prize! Sure, you lose all the cards and evolutions associated with that Pokémon, but you have brought yourself precious time to deal the fatal blow to your opponent.

4. Computer Search (Unlimited)

Looking for a specific card in your deck? If you're looking for one card in your deck for your killer combo and you have two cards in your hand to spare, why not use Computer Search to find that card? At number 4, Computer Search is one of the best trainers available out there. Be sure to put Computer Search in combo-intensive decks!

3. Pokémon Trader (Unlimited) and Pokémon Breeder (Unlimited)

The Pokémon Trader and Pokémon Breeder combo comes in at number 3. Imagine this: primed and ready, Squirtle is out. You have six Water energy attached to him. But you have a problem. Your big gun, Blastoise, hasn't shown up yet. Don't worry. With Pokémon Trader, Pokémon Breeder, and Magikarp in your hand there's still hope. Pokémon Trader away your useless Magikarp for Blastoise. Then play Pokémon Breeder to evolve Squirtle to Blastoise. Blastoise's Hydropump can now do 60 HP damage!

2. Energy Removal (Unlimited) and Super Energy Removal (Unlimited)

The #1 secondary theme for tournament-level decks is energy removal. An important part of the standard Haymaker (Scyther + Electabuzz + Hitmonchan + Energy Denial + Speed) deck, these two cards are tied for second place. Having no energy prevents an enemy Pokémon from attacking. As a result, you buy yourself time to power your own Pokémon for the final blow. Talk about treating the competition fairly!

1. Bill and Professor Oak (Unlimited)

Finally, trainer number one. Who takes the top spot? Bill and Professor Oak. Bill and Professor Oak provide speed. Speed, as in any CCG, can make or break a deck. These two trainer cards are absolutely critical to a successful deck. Any deck without these two trainers must seriously consider why they aren't present. Unless there is a good reason (like a stall deck), they should always be there.

Our journey through the world of trainers is now complete through Jungle. Pokémon Fossil adds another five trainer cards while Pokémon Team Rocket adds another nine trainer cards. Be sure to take some time looking at these new trainer cards. You never know. You may find a new trainer that may enhance your deck.

My thanks to Edward T. Hrzic III for allowing me to use some information from his Pokémon Tropical Mega-Battle Tournament Report.

Hunting

the Legendary Birds

by Ka-Lok Fung

The Legendary Birds are among the hardest Pokémon to catch in Pokémon Game Boy. The capture of a Legendary Bird requires both skill and patience. Similarly, the knockout of Legendary Birds in the Pokémon CCG is a great accomplishment and demonstrates a trainer's skills.

What are you going to do? Your pride and reputation as the "World's Greatest Pokémon Trainer" is at stake! You're Ash Ketchum and you've been challenged by your nemesis, Gary Oak, to a Pokémon match. You know that Gary will be hard to beat. With a 10-and-0 record, he's been doing well, but you've managed to get some inside information from his grandfather, Professor Oak. It seems that Gary has been using a deck with the Legendary Bird theme to defeat opponents.

The Legendary Birds are very powerful. With 70+ HP and resistance to Fighting Pokémon, they're incredible foes. However, their damaging attacks require a lot of energy so it'll take a few turns before they can attack. Furthermore, the Legendary Birds' retreat costs are high (two or more energy) so they will need to be played strategically and effectively.

Because the birds have powerful attacks, good strategy will be the key to beating Gary.

One possible strategy is prevention. Using energy denial, the birds won't have enough energy to attack. As Gary becomes frustrated with the lack of energy on his side of the table, you'll be inflicting paralysis/sleeping ailments on his Pokémon. You may even want to include Pokémon that can confuse, so he'll think twice before attacking. Another possible tactic is absorption. If you prefer a defensive approach, your 90+ HP Pokémon absorb damage. You then Damage Swap the damage to energy-less Pokémon so you can use Pokémon Center freely.

If you try to combine both strategies, you'll be trying to do too much and you'll be on a pathway to trouble. Instead, let's go with the prevention idea.

Choosing Pokémon will be quite easy once we decide what type you're playing. Grass and Psychic are good choices for this anti-bird deck, because they can confuse, paralyze, and poison Pokémon.

Psychic Pokémon have an edge, because they have the greatest anti-bird Pokémon, Mr. Mime. Why is Mr. Mime a powerful anti-bird card? Because it prevents attacks that deal more than 30 HP damage. Since many Legendary Birds' attacks do more than 30 HP damage, they won't affect Mr. Mime.

Now on to other Pokémon. Abra's evolution, Kadabra, is an awesome power hitter and defensive Pokémon, so we'll put in a few Abra family members. Some colorless won't hurt either, so let's add Jigglypuff to the mix. With her Sing attack, the birds will fall asleep. Hyper Beam removes energy from Defending Pokémon, so let's include some Dratini family members.

Trainer cards are relatively easy to put in. Speed will be critical to defeating Gary, so Professor Oak, Bill, and Gambler are in. We're also heavy into energy denial, so Energy Removal and Super Energy Removal cards are present. Item Finder supplements the Energy Denial theme, because it allows these cards to be re-used from the discard pile. As for energy, let's add some Psychic Energy and two Double Colorless Energy cards to help our colorless Pokémon.

Believe it or not, what you've just done is "metagame." Metagaming is looking at what themes are common in your area and building/revising your deck so that it can deal with these themes. Knowing that Gary was building a Legendary Bird deck, you built a deck that exploited Bird Land's weaknesses. Metagaming is very impor-

Care and Feeding of

by Orren McKay

Charizard is easily the most popular Pokémon today. As a result, he tends to creep into a lot of decks. What I'll be looking at is how to play Charizard and how to knock out Charizard if someone plays him against you.

The first place to start is with Charizard himself. Being a Stage 2 Pokémon, Charizard requires a bit more effort to get into play than just a basic Pokémon. If he used effectively in a deck, one must first decide how he's going to get into play. If your entire plan is to put Charizard into play as fast as possible and roast your opponent's Pokémon, then a good portion of the deck must be focused on doing just that.

It's possible to get an active Charizard that can do his 100-point attack in turn two, but this is rather unlikely. It requires a total of five cards (Charizard, two Double Colorless Energy, Charmander, and Pokémon Breeder) and the odds are against drawing this ideal hand. Even if you did pull this dream hand, after Charizard KO'd the first Pokémon, you'd have a Charizard sitting there with no energy on the table, and it would be two to four turns before you can use his attack again. While this could prove to be a very entertaining deck to play, most decks would be able to KO Charizard with their second Pokémon before he's ready for another Fire Spin.

Fortunately, this isn't the only way to play Charizard. A second way to play Charizard is to put him into an already solid deck and use him for a heavy hitter later in the game. Simply put him on the bench and beef up his energy slowly, then bring him out when he has enough energy for one or two good attacks. Another option is to play with Bad Charizard (from the Team Rocket expansion) instead of Charizard. Bad Charizard has fewer hit points than Charizard, but his attack is far more. Since his big attack can work off only two energy (and still has the possibility of doing the same damage if one gets some lucky coin flips), he makes an excellent alternative. He also shares the same excellent resistance to fighting as Charizard, making him that much better. The biggest problem with Bad Charizard is his 80 HP. This is pretty weak for a Stage 2 Pokémon, but hopefully his resistance and strong attack can make up for that.

Now that we've looked at some ways to play Charizard, it's time to look at ways to KO him. Charizard's (and Bad Charizard's) biggest weakness is their heavy dependence on energy. The easiest way to stop both of these Pokémon and render them mostly harmless is with an energy removal theme. Most decks today will have some Energy Removals and/or Super Energy Removals and should have a reasonably good defense available. If you don't have energy removal in your deck or just can't stand those particular cards there are a number of other ways to deal with Charizard. The simplest of these is to KO Charmander or Chameleon. Without these Pokémon on the table it's impossible to get Charizard out. Removing them solves the whole problem quite nicely. If you're not playing an aggressive deck, it's possible to delay Charizard or prevent him from evolving.

Mr. Mime provides a great anti-Charizard wall and a fast Aerodactyl can keep him from showing up at all.

If you're playing with Japanese cards, Mew (Myuu) can help remove the Charizard problem if he somehow manages to sneak onto the table. If you're playing a Water Pokémon deck, then Charizard isn't even much of a problem. You can capitalize on the Charizard line's weakness to water and just Hydro Pump them all off the table.

I hope this has shed some light on possible ways to play and KO Charizard and his evil cousin Bad Charizard. There are many other interesting and unusual ways to play and beat Charizard. Don't be afraid to try odd card combinations. You may just find some wonderful new way to play with everyone's favorite dragon Pokémon.

POKÉMON

Principles of Evolution

by Jason Winter

If you've played the Pokémon Game Boy game, you know that you always have the option of stopping your Pokémon from evolving. In the Pokémon CCG, you have that same option, but it's surprising how many people will just slap an evolved Pokémon on their Basic Pokémon, without even thinking about it. Just as in the video game, evolving is not always a good idea.

To understand why not to evolve, we first must understand why you evolve. Generally, an evolved Pokémon will have more hit points and more powerful attacks than its previous evolutionary form. But these abilities come at a price, and that price is a higher attack cost, either in Energy cards or some other cost, like discarding Energy or taking damage. That should be your first question when deciding whether or not to evolve a Pokémon: Can I pay for its attacks? A Pokémon that can't attack is almost always useless.

One reason to evolve a Pokémon, when you can't pay for its attacks, is to obtain the powerful Stage 2 forms that grant a special Pokémon power into play. These Pokémon powers typically work even if the Pokémon has no Energy or is sitting on the bench. However, unless your deck relies on trickery to win (like the Alakazam/Chansey stall deck), eventually you'll probably want to get Energy on that Pokémon, to power its hefty attacks.

The amount of Energy in your hand will usually determine when to evolve. If you only have one Energy in your hand, evolving a Pokémon to a form that has a four-Energy attack does you little good, as you won't be able to pay for its attacks. The general rule to follow is that you should only evolve your Pokémon when you have enough Energy in your hand to power its attacks (or possibly if you're one short and are fairly sure of getting an Energy soon). Remember, that each card in your hand is a precious resource that should not be spent unwisely. An evolved Pokémon that expires, before it can attach enough Energy to attack, is a wasted card.

Strategies for evolution also vary depending on whether you're trying to evolve your active Pokémon or a benched one. I rarely evolve my active Pokémon; by the time I get enough Energy on him to mount an attack, he'll have fainted, or nearly so. Rather, I prefer to evolve a benched Pokémon where he can attach Energy in relative safety and be ready to go when I make him active. This may sometimes require the sacrifice of my active Pokémon, but it's usually an acceptable price.

There are a few cases where you would want to evolve your active Pokémon. If my Pokémon is close to fainting, evolution can give it the extra hit points that it needs to keep going (or in the case of Beedrill, it can retreat for free). Because this can be wasteful, if your Pokémon is going to faint anyway, you should only do this if it's your last Pokémon (in which case you've got nothing to lose) or if you can power the evolved Pokémon's attacks on this turn. Weedle/Kakuna/Beedrill is an example of a Pokémon trio that can evolve one stage on every turn and can attach one Energy, on each turn, and continue fighting. Also, evolution removes any bad statuses (Confusion, Sleep, Paralysis, Poison), so if you really need to fix up that active Pokémon and don't have a Full Heal handy, evolution might be your only choice. Just keep an eye on what your opponent's next attack will be. If your evolved Pokémon can't survive it any better than your non-evolved one, there's probably no reason to waste the evolution card.

The last reason not to evolve your Pokémon, is a strategy that exists in every CCG—surprise. If you have two Squirtles and a Pikachu on your bench, your opponent won't know your true capabilities. Can you evolve them into Wartortle and Raichu? Or, are you stuck with Basic Pokémon? Also, if you evolve one of your two Squirtles and your opponent uses Gust of Wind, he can choose whether he wants to deal with a Squirtle or a Wartortle. If you don't evolve the Squirtle, his Gust will make one of them active, and then you're in control: Do you evolve the active Pokémon and give him a big surprise, or evolve the Squirtle on your bench and let him bide his time attaching Energy until he's ready to fight?

Here is another strategy employing Gust of Wind: If your opponent has made the error of evolving his Pokémon too quickly, bring Gust of Wind into play before they can get Energy on their evolved Pokémon. In a recent tournament, my opponent evolved his Charmander into a Charizard, without putting any Energy on it. I quickly Gusted the Charizard and took it down in a few turns, before he could attach four Energy to it.

The temptation to evolve can be strong (some would say even stronger than the dark side), but reckless evolution only leads to losing decks. Think it through, take your time, and weigh the positives and negatives before you make your move—that's good advice regarding any CCG.

The temptation to evolve can be strong, but reckless evolution only leads to losing decks.

Friendly Tournament Decks

by Doug Dineen

The Pokémon are invading stores across America, and with them come tournaments — the pinnacle of card game mastery. However, with all of the different decks that you can make, it can be hard to find one that you like! Here's three that have worked for me in friendly tournaments, and I'm sure that they can work for you too.

Electric Water

Like the name of this deck? My friends looked at me weirdly the first time that I said, "I'm using Electric Water." The point of this deck is to paralyze your enemies, while doing lots of damage in the process. There's even some Energy denial aspects in this deck, which can be beefed up with the right Trainer cards. The deck has some pretty powerful Basic Pokémon with Electabuzz, and as soon as you can evolve Pikachu into Raichu, use Raichu as a wall to stall your enemies' attacks with his agility attack. Magikarp is good cannon fodder, but as soon as it becomes a Gyrados, you have a heavy-hitter on your team. The Poli group is universally valuable, while Poliwrath, Dewgong, and Magnemite can deny Energy or paralyze your opponents. Professor Oak is there to help you get the cards that you need quickly, while Bill is always a nice addition to any deck. If you'd like to beef up the Energy denial aspect of the deck, replace the two Seels and the Dewgong with 1 Super Energy Removal and 2 Energy Removal Trainer cards.

Firestorm

I conceived this deck, while at a tournament, because I noticed that almost no one was using Fire Pokémon! This is a pure Fire-based deck that does lots of damage, but it consumes your Energy quickly. There are 4 Energy Retrievals in the deck to help get that Energy back, and 4 Bills to help find the Energy in the first place. Growlithe and Magmar are your heavy hitters early in the game, with your Charizard doing the most damage near the end. Computer Search can help you find that evolution card that you need. If you'd like to make this a Survival of the Fittest deck, replace the two Ponyta with two Gust of Wind. Then you can bring your opponent's weak Pokémon out front and beat them up.

Annoying Army

The Annoying Army is designed for just that: Annoy your opponent! The deck is packed with Basic Pokémon that paralyze or poison your opponent's Pokémon, and some even cancel the opposing attacks altogether! My girlfriend hates it when I use this deck. As always, Bill is there to lend a hand (or in this case, a card or two). PlusPower adds more punch to your attacks, while Super Potion removes the damage somehow caused by your opponent. Chansey and Onix are walls, so you can ignore your opponent's attacks while piling Energy on your benched Pokémon. All of the Grass-type Pokémon, paralyze or poison the opposing Pokémon, while Sandshrew can just ignore the attacks!

Hitmonchan is always appreciated in a fighting deck, since he's a Basic Pokémon with 70 HP.

You could make this into an all-Grass deck by making the following changes:

Remove

- 3x Sandshrew
- 2x Onix
- 2x Hitmonchan
- 11x Fighting Energy

Add

- 1x Bulbasaur
- 1x Ivysaur
- 1x Venusaur
- 1x Weedle
- 2x Kakuna
- 1x Beedrill
- 11x Grass Energy

This is just to get you started. Use these as a springboard for even more varied decks, and create your own themes! Don't forget, though, have fun building decks, or else you won't have any fun playing them!

Training Pokémon Using Commons & Uncommons

by Ka-Lok Fung

using common and uncommon cards have existed since the beginning of CCGs. Pokémon common and uncommon decks are continuing this trend. They may not be tournament-level but they are fun and cheap.

These four decks are based on different themes and different varieties of Pokémon. They are great for teaching good deck-building principles and introducing Pokémon beginners to the more advanced levels of play.

Unlike the Game Boy game, in the Pokémon card game the Pokémon have pre-defined attacks. As a result, a lot of strategy is devoted to raising and forming a Pokémon team. In these decks, the number of Pokémon varies from 19 to 24, but they also have common characteristics. A minimum of 12 basic Pokémon are included to ensure that one shows up in the starting hand. In addition, there are at least two evolution lines of Pokémon that can do some heavy damage (40HP+). Furthermore, the number of Basic Pokémon is less than or equal to the number of Stage 1 Pokémon.

The Grass Roots

Nidorans form the foundation of this mono-grass deck as Nidoran's (F) ability, call for family attack will allow Nidorans to come into play. Once Nidorans are in play, their evolutions, Nidorina and Nidorino, will double-kick Grass Roots to victory. If Nidoran, Nidorina, or Nidorino, run low on HP, Bellsprout's evolution, Weepinbell, will step up to the podium to hassle the opponent's Pokémon with poisonpowder and razor leaf. Depending on the game status, Koffing may also be brought in to confuse and poison defending Pokémon.

deck's primary fighters. Squirtle's bubble attack and Seel's high HP create an incredible combination. Evolving them to their Stage 1 evolutions, Wartortle and Dewgong, makes this team even more ferocious. Pikachu and Magnemite compensate for the water Pokémon's weakness to electric Pokémon. There are two Basic Pikachu and two Jungle Pikachu to deal with varying gameplay situations. Jigglypuff completes this group of Pokémon with its lullaby attack that will wreak havoc on defending Pokémon.

Psi PokéMen

This group of Pokémon is very versatile. They may stall the game using a combination of paralysis, confusion, and sleeping attacks, or come out swinging with strong attackers. Gastly, Haunter, and Drowzee provide the deck's delay element with sleep and confusion-inducing attacks, while the power hitters, Abra and Kadabra, protect the rear. Abra's psyshock paralyzes the opposing Pokémon, while its evolution, Kadabra, does its whopping super psy attack for 50 damage. Power hitter Jynx serves as their back-up.

The Brute Fighters

This deck utilizes brute force, as its central theme, to knock out defending Pokémon. Using Mankey to discover what card the opponent will pull up next, Brute Fighters' fighting Pokémon will select the most effective Active Pokémon to beat the opponent into submission. Onix allows the deck's strong attackers (Rhyhorn, Rhydon, Machop, and Machoke) to develop on the bench, while Spearow gives this deck the necessary speed and resistance against other fighting Pokémon.

Trainers

Trainer cards must be selected to minimize weaknesses in a deck and to maximize strong points. Trainer cards are most effective in a group that has a common theme. A deck with only one or two Energy Removal and 1 Super Energy Removal will be only a minor inconvenience to your opponent, but if you devote a considerable number of cards to that strategy, it can be a very effective one. Trainer cards can make or break a game. Take your time in deciding which trainer cards should be included in a deck.

The Grass Roots

Here, trainer cards are focused on the ability to retrieve Pokémon from the draw deck. PokéBall, with its ability to bring Koffing or Bellsprout into play, complements Nidoran's (F) call for family attack.

The standard theme of speed, using Bill and Professor Oak, is included in Grass Roots deck to quickly get energy and Pokémon into play. Rounding off this Trainer series is Gust of Wind. This Trainer card not only drives away pesky defending Pokémon, but it may also be used to prematurely bring up a nasty that is building on the bench.

Electrifying Water

The majority of Electrifying Water Pokémon have relatively low HP. To compensate for this weakness, trainers in this deck are focused on HP recovery and prevention. Potions and Super Potions make up the majority of this theme, as they keep the Poké-mon going. Defender also helps by being a damage preventer. This Trainer card will allow Magnemite (with a 30HP or higher) to survive its own self-destruct attack and the last Trainer, Bill, gets more cards into your hand.

Psi PokéMen

Working with the theme established in the Pokémon section, Psi PokéMen is very fast, with four Bills and two Professor Oaks.

Potions and Super Potions restore HP lost by an enemy's attack while Energy Removal cards wreak havoc on enemy Pokémon who depend heavily on 2+ energies to power attacks.

The Brute Fighters

Deck speed is key to The Brute Fighters. With four Bills and two Professor Oaks, you should have a wide selection of Pokémon and energy cards to choose from, every turn. To prevent decking (i.e., no more draw cards) there are two maintenance cards to bring cards back into the draw deck.

While speed is key to The Brute Fighters, it is important to note that many of these Pokémon have high retreat costs. To deal with this annoyance, there are four Switch(s) to retreat damaged Pokémon. Finally, PlusPower cards, while adding to the brute force theme, serve as finishers for Active Pokémon's attacks.

Energy

Determining the optimum number of energy cards in any deck is extremely difficult because it is very theoretical and experimental. The correct number of energy cards in a deck can only be determined by thorough playtesting. A good starting number is about 25, as illustrated here.

Decks that require the discard of energy as a cost, to use an attack or to utilize an effect of a trainer card, will need to have more energy to avoid an energy crisis. In The Brute Fighters, for example, many of the fighting Pokémon's powerful attacks need 3+ energy. As a result, there is more energy in this common/uncommon deck than in any of the three other decks.

My thanks to B. Brokaw, K. Williams, and the people of Pokégym, who have been a source of inspiration for this article.

Going it alone

Sometimes, less is more

by Jason Winter

Properly constructed, a Pokémon deck utilizing only one type of energy can be just as efficient, if not more so, than a deck with two types. There are advantages and disadvantages to each deck concept. The key is maximizing the advantages while limiting the disadvantages.

The first and most obvious advantage is that you'll only need one type of energy. Anyone who's played a game where all they can draw are Psychic Pokémon and Lightning Energy know what a hassle it can be to get the proper types of energy to match your Pokémon. With a single-energy deck, you'll never have this problem again. Not only will you always be able to power your attacks, but you'll stand a better chance of getting your major attacks going. Beedrill is a perfect example; his Poison Sting is generally more powerful than his Twineedle. If all your energy is Grass, the cost of the two attacks is identical, and you can use the more powerful Poison Sting.

The inclusion of just one energy type has a broader effect on deck construction. The most basic philosophies of deck construction suggest 22 to 24 Pokémon and 28 to 30 energy cards. Since you are always guaranteed to get the right energy for the Pokémon you have in play and never need to worry about mismatched energy, you can reduce these numbers slightly. I favor about 25 to 27 energy and closer to 20 Pokémon. This allows you more room for trainer cards, and it's the right mix of these cards that can often mean the difference between victory and defeat.

As you look through your Pokémon, you'll notice that attacks of equal total energy cost that require Colorless Energy are typically less powerful than those that don't. In other words, an attack that requires one Fire and two Colorless Energy will be less powerful than one that requires three Fire Energy (take a look at Ponyta or Beedrill). With a one-energy deck, you'll always be able to use the more potent attacks.

And now the bad news. What happens if you're playing a single-energy Fire deck and someone brings out their single-energy (or even dual-energy) Water deck?

Chances are, you lose. The biggest problem with building a single-energy deck is that most Pokémon of a single energy type have the same weakness. A similar problem exists with the resistance of your opponent's Pokémon. Many Fighting Pokémon have a resistance to Lightning, so an all-Lightning deck could have problems when faced with a heavy Fighting deck.

There are two solutions to this problem. The first is to include Colorless Pokémon in your mix. You'll still only need the one type of energy, and the Colorless Pokémon will allow you to spread out your weaknesses among two or three types of energy and reduce the chance your opponent will have the proper resistance to your Pokémon. If you go this route, a few Double Colorless Energy cards may also come in handy.

The other option is to carefully select your Pokémon so that they don't have the same weaknesses. Within most Pokémon energy types there are a few with different weaknesses than the majority. Among Water Pokémon, which are typically vulnerable to Lightning, Poliwhar is weak against Grass. Machop is weak against Psychic (as opposed to the Grass weakness Fighting Pokémon typically have). And while most Psychic Pokémon are weak against their Psychic brothers, Gastly has no weakness at all! Dratini also shares this strength. A combination of these two tactics (spreading out your weaknesses and using Colorless Pokémon) can also be effective.

That said, Grass Pokémon are probably the best at utilizing the one-energy philosophy. Two of their Pokémon, Nidoran and Koffing, are weak against Psychic, rather than Fire Energy. As a result, four Nidorans (and their evolved states, Nidorino and Nidoking) and four Koffings form the nucleus of a Grass deck that can be complemented by any two or three other types of Fire-weak Grass Pokémon. Best of all, no Pokémon in the original release have resistance to Grass attacks (but watch out for Jungle)!

Finally, what about Trainer cards? While they are usually dependent on personal tastes and the individual Pokémon in one's deck, there are a few decisions that can be made regarding the single-energy deck. Since you probably won't have too much trouble with meeting energy requirements, cards like Energy Retrieval are less useful. Cards that make you use up the energy on your Pokémon are effective: Super Energy Removal can really inflict some damage and Super Potion is also a solid choice. If you are concerned about getting suitable weakness/resistance match-ups, Switch and Gust of Wind can provide the boost you need at the end. It's like a baseball manager sending in the pinch hitter or ace closer in the ninth inning.

As with any Pokémon deck, you'll need to experiment with the exact mix of energy, Pokémon, and Trainer cards to get the balance you feel most comfortable with. So pick your favorite color of Pokémon and go to it! And I'll take Misty and her Water Pokémon against Brock and his Fighting Pokémon

TRADING CARD GAME

by Marc Domask

When Wizards of the Coast released the Jungle expansion, I quickly noticed something strange: Unlike the original set, Jungle had a definite theme — green. Almost every card that I saw was either green or Colorless. Naturally, many new strategies have developed around these colors. This begs the question: How do I beat these decks?

Many of the most effective strategies focus on getting a few, big Pokémon, like Charizard or Gyarados, into play and then using their powerful attacks to defeat any Pokémon that your opponent may send out to battle.

However, the Mr. Mime card (from Jungle) changes all that because Mr. Mime has a phenomenal power that allows him to act as a wall against these heavy-hitters. Whenever an attack will cause 20 or more damage to Mr. Mime, that damage is ignored. Suddenly, that 100 damage Fire Spin doesn't hurt as much.

Effective as this is against large attacks, it still leaves Mr. Mime open to small attacks. With only 40 HP, it won't be long until Mr. Mime hits the discard pile. Luckily, a classic combo from the basic set provides a way to keep Mr. Mime going indefinitely, but it requires some preparation. First, we need to devote our deck to Psychic Pokémon. The cornerstone of all Psychic decks has always been Alakazam, which permitted us to move damage counters around to different Pokémon, at will.

However, this required an active Pokémon with high HP, to ensure that it wouldn't be KO'd in one attack. Since Psychic doesn't contain many such Pokémon, this left the strategy in a rather precarious position. But Mr. Mime solves this problem. Nidoking's Toxic is the only move that can KO Mr. Mime in one turn and it is easy to spot and hard to set up.

What happens to all of that damage that we're removing from Mr. Mime? After a while, the Pokémon on the bench won't be able to handle any more damage and this is where the other part of the combo comes in. By using Pokémon Center, a trainer from basic, we can remove all of the damage counters from all of our Pokémon. The only catch is that we need to remove all of the energy from those Pokémon, but this shouldn't be a problem if we build the deck around this theme. By including Basic Pokémon with high HP, we can build up a lot of damage. If everything is running correctly, their only purpose is to soak up damage and we can just let them sit without any energy!

Now, we need some Trainer cards for support. Since this strategy relies on several key cards, we need a way to get them. There is always the Pokémon Trader, but Jungle provides us with a few other ways. Poké Ball is similar to Pokémon Trader, except that it isn't guaranteed — when you play Poké Ball, you have a 50/50 chance of being able to search your deck for any Pokémon you want. Pokémon Breeder allows us to bring out that Alakazam quickly. We can use Bill to speed drawing and, early in the game, Kangaskhan will also help us with this function. Maintenance allows us to recycle cards back into our deck (as well as to draw a card), and Switch allows us to easily replace useless Active Pokémon.

One last note on this deck: It's weaknesses. It's going to take us a couple of turns to set this up, so we need protection from fast decks. One of the quickest decks out there revolves around Hitmonchan. Using the Special Punch attack, we can expect 40 damage attacks on turn three. This dictates one of our support Pokémon: Farfetch'd. Since he has resistance to fighting, it will take Hitmonchan at least 6 turns to KO him. By that time, the combo should be well under way. Just send Farfetch'd to the discard pile and replace him with Mr. Mime. Decks with Psychic Resistance will also pose a threat. They could just leave out one Pokémon and wait until your deck runs out. Fortunately, our Kangaskhans and Chanseys provide back up. If you suspect that your opponent is playing one of these decks, work up one of your bench Pokémon.

This deck should be able to defend against the heavy-hitting grass, fire, and water decks that are out there and it's easy to modify to fit the local playing style. Remember to leave the basic deck engine (Mr. Mime, Alakazam, and Pokémon Center) intact.

For Three!

TRY THIS three-handed variant!

by Kenny Mak and
Scott Ryan

So, if you've played three-player Star Trek, four-player Star Wars, or eight-player Magic, it's inevitable that you would want to have a multiplayer variant of Pokémon. With multiple opponents and multiple attacking monsters, this variant personifies our favorite Pokémon villains at their best. This is not the Pokémon League, trainers! Team Rocket doesn't play by those rules. So prepare for trouble and make it double, and see if you can make it through Pokémon: Team Rocket Style!

This is a three-way Pokémon rumble. Each of the three trainers may have up to two Active Pokémon in play. The basic rules apply with the following exceptions:

1 The opening hand shall consist of nine cards rather than seven. This is to accommodate a better selection in starting Pokémon, as there will be two starting Pokémon. If your hand does not have two Basic Pokémon, show your hand to your opponents, then shuffle it back into your deck. You draw nine new cards and your opponents may draw up to two additional cards. You may choose to have one Active Pokémon at any other point in the game, even if you have some on the Bench.

2 As with the regular rules, you may play any number of Trainer cards and Pokémon on your turn. You may also play up to two Energy cards. The only restriction to this is that you may not play the two Energy cards on the same Pokémon. The effect of this rule is to speed up the game.

3 A trainer may choose to attack with both active Pokémon. However, the two Pokémon cannot target the same trainer, and the attacking trainer chooses which opposing trainers the Pokémon will attack. The defending trainer chooses which of his Active Pokémon will defend against the attack. Keep in mind that you'll be dealing with four other Pokémon, not just one. There will be up to four different sets of Weaknesses and Resistances. Even if you see a beaten-up Pokémon that is ripe for the picking, you'll still need to deal with its tag-team partner. On the other hand, you can protect the Active Pokémon that you want to keep in play.

4 For attacks that deal damage to Benched Pokémon, all Pokémon that belong to the two trainers involved in the battle that are not involved in the current battle (all but two) are considered to be on the Bench. This includes a trainer's second Active Pokémon.

Example: if Bob's Basic Magnetron does Self-Destruct on Cheryl's Dragonite, Magnetron deals 80 damage to both itself and Dragonite and 20 damage to all of Bob's and Cheryl's other Pokémon.

5 When a Pokémon is Knocked Out by its own attack, the targeted trainer gets the Prize.

Example: if a Basic Zapdos with seven damage counters attacks Muk with Thunder and flips a tails, Muk's trainer gets a Prize.

For Pokémon that are Knocked Out by confusion or poison (not Knocked Out while Confused or Poisoned), the Prize goes to the trainer who first confused or poisoned the Pokémon since it became Active.

6 You lose if you run out of Pokémon or your deck is exhausted. And as usual, the first trainer with all six of their Prizes wins.

Strategy in this variation is more involved, as you will have to look carefully to decide your attack. Even if your opponent has a Pokémon with a Weakness against yours, they may also have one with a matching Resistance. In that case, you would deal little damage when you thought you would perhaps Knock Out one. In addition, you may want to look at Pokémon that can cause conditions, as they may generate a Prize somewhere down the road under these rules.

As your strategy changes in this variation, your Pokémon will also change. You may notice that some aren't as effective as they were in the basic format and some are more powerful than before. Three of the Pokémon that have changed for the good are Kangaskhan, Ditto, and (gulp!) Porygon. With Kangaskhan, you used to waste an attack in order to draw a card. But now that you have two Pokémon to attack with, it doesn't feel as much of a waste. Since you can play two energies, the extra draw will help get to them faster. Ditto's advantage in all this is that it will be able to change into any of the four Defending Pokémon. Porygon has not been popular with players and the Conversion attack looks to be another waste of turn. But here, Porygon can help dish out the damage alongside your other Pokémon.

This variant will help you pay more attention to the details of the original game. It is a great way to see how your new decks work. Since the game is much more drawn out, you will see how the deck eventually develops. Even though the deck strategy may work differently, the basic ideas here will be very useful. So if you feel a bit like Team Rocket, give evil a try in this multiplayer variant.

The Five Jumbo 3 mail-in cards run across the top of the page. They're playability is very strong. The set of five goes for $400-$600.

There are rumored to be only 150 of this Kangaskhan promo. The value of this card may be as much as $1000-$2500.

Key Cards for Prosperous Collectors

All of the cards shown on this page are either difficult to get, very expensive, or both. They are most often sought out and acquired by adult collectors. All prices mentioned on this page are approximate and vary widely depending upon from whom the card is acquired.

The three All Nippon Air (ANA) promo sets required you to fly on the airline to be able to acquire a two-card promo set. Each of these sets sell for between $40 and $400.

The Happy Birthday Pikachu card came with stickers and a 16-month calendar. Prices run $150-$500. It is the only holofoil Pikachu.

The Ancient Mew card comes in two version: Glitter and Sparkle. The Glitter (original) has Nintendo misspelled at the very bottom of the card. The pair go for anywhere from $50 to $200.

How do we get our pricing? We get our pricing by having retail stores submit the actual prices for which they sell the singles, packs and boxes. It's a tremendous amount of data to gather and compile, but it's worth it, as our prices are the most accurate and reliable. The Trading Card Game field generally uses SCRYE as the standard. The majority of game, comic and sports card stores use SCRYE pricing and have a tattered copy near the cash register to prove it. The MEDIAN price is the most commonly used price.

To reiterate, we don't make up these prices. We don't set the prices. We simply publish a compilation of the data that we receive.

 Transform into any other Pokémon while Ditto is Active, Confused, or Paralyzed.
Pokémon Power: Transformation If Ditto is your Active Pokémon, treat it as if it were the same card as the Defending Pokémon, including type, Hit Points, Weakness, and so on, except Ditto can't evolve, always has this Pokémon Power, and you may treat any Energy attached to Ditto as Energy of any type. Ditto isn't a copy of any other Pokémon while Ditto is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed.

Introduction to the Japanese Card Section

Why are there so many Japanese cards? Simply because the game originated in Japan and there have been many more sets released there. (See page 127 for details.)

Why have all of the cards not yet been released in English? Wizards of the Coast is releasing the sets more rapidly than they were released in Japan, but so far, they have only printed/translated about 30% of all of the existing Japanese cards (counting the U.S. edition of Team Rocket).

Are your translations of the Japanese cards the Official translations? Absolutely not! However, we think our translations are the best in the field and each time a new set comes out in English, we are always quite proud of how accurate our translation has been.

What is most likely to be the difference between the official Wizards translation and SCRYE's? Two things: We tend to translate the name of the attack literally (without Americanizing it), and our text tends to be shorter.

About those lines at the very top for each card: Each line lists the Pokémon's Pokémon number (left), rarity (center), set (right). Some cards are in more than one set, sometimes with different art. You'll note that the card below appears in three sets (well, two sets plus there's a Promo card).

Note that the Promo card has different art. We have shown a picture of the card with different art either to the leftside of the main card (like above) or above it. You should realize that all three versions of this card have the exact same game text.

Venusaur 100 HP

Lvl: 64 Stage 2: Evolves from Ivysaur
Weakness: ♣ Retreat: ♣

Pokémon Power: Solar Power Once during your turn (before your attack), you may use this power. Your Active Pokémon and the Defending Pokémon are no longer Asleep, Confused, Paralyzed or Poisoned. This power can't be used if Venusaur is Asleep, Confused, or Paralyzed.

DAMAGE 40: ●●●●● Mega Drain Remove a number of damage counters from Venusaur equal to half the damage done to the Defending Pokémon (after applying Weakness and Resistance). (Rounded up to the nearest 10.) If Venusaur has few damage counters than that, remove all of them.

137 (N64 Pok. Stadium) H Promo#15

Cool Porygon 50 HP

Lvl: 15 Basic Pokémon
Weakness: ♣ Resist: ♣-30; Retreat: ♣

●●●● Texture Magic You may change Cool Porygon's Resistance to a type of your choice other than colorless. If the Defending Pokémon has a Weakness, you may change it to a type of your choice other than Colorless. (Benching either Pokémon ends the effect on that Pokémon.)

Damage 20x: ●●●●● 3-D Attack Flip 3 coins. This attack does 20 times the number of heads.

This is a Different Art promo of the card from Jungle.

Cards are listed by color, then by Pokémon#

However, some Neo Cards are listed adjacent to the Pokémon they evolve into. Babies, for example, are listed before the Pokémon they evolve into. King Slowpoke (Yadoking) is listed after Slowpoke. Haganail (Steel) is listed after Onix (Colorless). Unfortunately the new promo Haganail was the last card put in the book and is located with Airmundo, the other Steel Pokémon.

After the Pokémon, the Trainers, Stadium cards and Neo Energy Cards can be found.

Note: If Wizards of the Coast has printed an English version of a Japanese card, you won't find the card listed in the Japanese Player's Guide section (with a few exceptions). So, this means there are no Base, Jungle, Fossil and Team Rocket set cards listed in the Japanese section.

This is a Different Art promo of the card from Team Rocket.

Lt. Surge's Negotiation

Ask opponent if he or she is willing to pick up one of his side cards. If so, each player may pick up one side card and put it in his or her hand. If not, you may draw one card from your deck.

R Gym Leaders

Lt. Surge's Secret Operation

Choose one card from your hand and put it face down on your bench. That card will then be treated as a Basic Pokémon as long as it is face down, even if it is not an actual Basic Pokémon. If you wish, you can turn the card faceup during your turn. If you use this card's power or special power, or you Evolve it or make it run away, or if it receives damage from an attack or receives an effect, it must be turned faceup. Once the card is faceup and it is not a Basic Pokémon, you must discard the card and all cards attached to it.

Stadium Cards

Special Stadium Rules

The Gym Leaders expansion introduced a new card type, the Stadium card. Here are the four rules for using Stadium Cards:

1. Stadium cards affect only those Pokémon cards which have Gym Leader names on them (in the bottom right hand corner there will be a picture of the Gym Leader Trainer).
2. Only one Stadium card can be in play at a time. If either player puts another into play, the owner of the one currently in play must immediately discard it.
3. Once put into play, the only way to remove a Stadium card is to put another into play. They cannot be removed voluntarily.
4. They are placed to the side of the battlefield, when they are put into play.

R Neo

When a non-Colorless Energy card which is attached to a Pokémon must ordinarily be discarded due to an attack, a Pokémon Power, or a Trainer, instead put the Energy card back into its owner's hand.

Blaine's Deck
Chal/Darkness

Gurentown Gym

When either player's Blaine Pokémon take damage from Water Pokémon, Blaine's Pokémon will not be affected by their Weakness.

Gym Leaders

Derangement Gym

When either player uses a Trainer card (except Stadium cards), the player must flip a coin. If tails, the player may not use the Trainer but the opponent can use it if he or she wishes. If the opponent player chooses to use it, he or she cannot use a card which is attached to a Pokémon or a card which is used in the field (like Clefairy Doll), nor can the card be used if he or she cannot meet all requirements of the card (like discarding a card from his or her hand). If the card must be discarded after use, or if the player cannot use the card, it must be placed in the owner's discard, not the opponent's.

Misty's Deck
Gym Exp#1

Hanada City Gym

When this Stadium card is in play, the number of Energy cards that must be discarded when Misty's Pokémon retreat will be reduced by 1 (but will not become lower than 0).

Promo

Koga's Ninja Gym

Each player, if he or she wishes, may throw a coin once per turn. If heads, he or she may select one of Koga's Basic Pokémon from his or her deck and bench it. Then shuffle the deck well.

Lt. Surge's Deck
Gym Exp#1

Kuchiba City Gym

If each player wishes, they can use this Trainer once per turn. Flip a coin. If heads, the damage to the opponent's Active Pokémon is increased by 10 damage. If tails, the attacking Pokémon also gets 10 damage. Damage to benched Pokémon is unchanged.

Gym Leaders

Narrow Gym

If this card is in play, you and your opponent can have only two Pokémon on your bench. When this card enters play, any player with five benched Pokémon must pick one and put it and all of its attached cards back into his or her hand.

Nibi City Gym

As long as this card is in play, damage caused by any of Brock's Pokémon will be unaffected by the target's Resistance.

Brock's Deck

Special Neo Energy Cards

G, R Neo Promo, Neo

Dark Energy

This card is treated as one Dark Energy card. If the Pokémon to which this card is attached does damage to opponent's Active Pokémon, the attack will do an additional 10 damage. If a Pokémon to which this card is attached is not a Dark Pokémon, it will take 10 damage each turn during the Check phase, no matter its Weakness or Resistance.

Dark Pokémon are found in Team Rocket and in Neo. The two Neo Pokémon are black cards, Yamikarasu (the Crow of Darkness) and Nyuura.

Recycle Energy

Treat this card as one Colorless Energy card. When this card would ordinarily be discarded due to game play, put it back into its owner's hand instead.

(Colorless Energy cannot substitute for Energy of another color, but Energy of any other color can substitute for Colorless Energy.)

Neo

Steel Energy

This card is treated as one Steel Energy. When the Pokémon to which this card is attached takes damage, the damage will be reduced by 10. In addition, if the Pokémon to which this card is attached is not a Steel Pokémon, the damage it does when attacking other Pokémon will be reduced by 10.

Neo

Team Rocket's Special Training Gym

How to Identify What Set a Pokémon Card is From Base Set: No identifying symbol.

Base Set 2: Base Set 2 symbol.

Jungle: Leaf symbol.

Fossil: Fossil symbol.

Team Rocket: Team Rocket "R" symbol

Jumbo Vending Machines sets 1, 2, 3: Poké Ball symbol.

All Jumbo cards are gloss-coated on the front and there are no holofoil cards. The sheets are numbered from #01-#18 in the lower left. There are 6 sets of 3 sheets in each series. The 18 uncommons are found on only 1 sheet, whereas the 18 commons are each found on 2 sheets.

Quick Starter: Poké Ball symbol. Consists of Red deck (sometimes called Pink) and Green Deck (sometimes called Olive). There are 3 holofoils in each deck. The cards in the decks are duplicates of the Jumbo Vending cards. The way to differentiate them is that they are not on glossy stock and have no rarity symbols.

Gym Leader Decks, Gym Leaders Expansion, and Gym Leaders Expansion 2: Challenge From The Darkness: Gym symbol—Poké Ball with tiny "Gym". (Use our PokéIndex to figure out which Gym Leader set a card is from.)

Southern Islands: Palm Tree symbol.

Promo Card Intropack: Silhouette of either Bulbasaur or Squirtle. These cards are also numbered.

Neo and Neo Promos: Double star symbol.

Promos: Varies. Some have symbols, some don't: The ones that we've seen include Lightning Bolt, Camera (Pikachu Snap), mini Black Dragon (Coro Coro comic book symbol), GB (Game Boy Japan), Pokéball card-back and a Pikachu's Vacation movie symbol.

Oversized Promos: These cards are huge: 5-5/8" x 8-1/4" in size. There are eight different ones; all came in the Coro Coro comic book (including the English language Charizard). There's also one Oversize card so far from Wizards of the Coast, a Pikachu.

PokéIndex Notes

You'll note that for some Gym Leader deck cards there are duplicates in either Gym Leaders or Challenge from the Darkness expansions. The deck cards have no rarity while the expansion cards do.

Also, all but one of the cards found in the Quick Starters set are also in the Jumbo Vending sets. The Jumbo Vending cards have a gloss-coated front, the Quick Starters don't.

PokéIndex

Each card is listed for every Pokémon, and includes card rarity, set(s), level, and HP. Perhaps most importantly, the right-most column lists the page number where the card's text can be found. We count 674 Pokémon cards that have different game text (i.e., excluding cards that just have different art).

simply the best guide

for the serious Pokémon player and collector

The experts at SCRYE Magazine bring you the best Pokémon guide in the universe! The Ultimate Unofficial Pokémon Price and Players Guide gives you, in one place, everything you need to know about: Team Rocket, Pocket Monsters, Gym Leaders and more.

Plus, you'll find complete translations of Japanese cards and deck-building strategies that show you how to build the most powerful Pokémon deck in the world. If you collect Pokémon or if you want to win the next time you bring out your deck, this book is for you.

With more than 700 photos and complete pricing information, you'll know what to look for, what it's worth and how it will make your deck more powerful. This is the only Pokémon book you'll need.
